PROLOGUE.

Readers of "Tarzan of the Apes"-there were millions of them-have been awaiting with eagerness "The Return of Tarzan." They need no introduction to the ape-man, who was an English lord by ancestry and an inhabitant of the treetops by fate until the same fate brought him out and made him a civilized man after twenty years of life among the great apes of Africa. His adventures, as wonderful and interesting as any set forth in words, have been the center of interest in a story that is unique in its originality.

Now we have "The Return of Tarzan," as thrilling as its forerunner. In it are told the further adventures of the splendid ape-man, who at last wins his way to the side of his true love after facing countless perils by land and sea.

Whoever read "Tarzan of the Apes" needs no invitation to peruse this story. Others are warned that after they read this sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes" they won't be satisfied until they have read that story also.

> CHAPTER XXV. The Fifty Frightful Men.

spot, which was so densely took her in his arms to kiss her, and of surrounded by thorn bushes a sudden the ape-man saw red through and rangled vines and creepers of huge girth that not even Sabor, the tiger, could worm his sinuous way within, nor Tantor, with his giant strength. force the barriers which protected the council chamber of the great apes from all but the harmless denizens of Fifty trips Tarzan made before he had deposited all the ingots within the precincts of the amphitheater. Then from the bollow of an ancient, lightning blasted tree he produced the very spade with which the had uncovered the chest of Professor Archimedes Q. Porter, which he had once, apelike, buried in this selfsame spot. With this he dug a long trench, into which he laid the fortune that his blacks had carried from the forgotten treasure vaults of the city of Opar. That night he slept within the amphitheater, and early the next morning set out to revisit his cabin before returning to his Waziri. Finding things as he had left them, he went forth into the jungle to hunt, intending to bring his prey to the cabin where he might feast in comfort, spending the night upon a comfortable couch.

For five miles toward the south he roamed, toward the banks of a fair sized river that flowed into the sea about six miles from his cabin. He had gone inland about half a mile, when there came suddenly to his trained nostrils the one scent that sets the whole savage jungle aquiver-Tarzan smelled

The wind was blowing off the ocean. so Tarzan knew that the authors of the scent were west of him. Mixed with the man scent was the scent of Numa. Man and lion! "I had better hasten," thought the ape-man, for he had recognized the scent of whites. "Numa may be a-hunting."

When he came through the trees to the edge of the jungle he saw a woman kneeling in prayer, and before her stood a wild, primitive looking white man, his face buried in his arms. Behind the man a mangy lion was advancing slowly toward this easy prey. The man's face was averted; the woman's bowed in prayer. He could not see the features of either.

Already Numa was about to spring. There was not a second to spare. Tarzan could not even unsling his bow and fit an arrow in time to send one of his deadly poisoned shafts into the yellow hide. He was too far away to reach the beast in time with his knife. There was but a single hope-a lone alternative. And with the quickness of thought the ape-man acted. A brawny arm flew back-for the briefest fraction of an instant a huge spear poised above the giant's shoulder -and then the mighty arm shot out. and swift death tore through the intervening leaves, to bury itself in the heart of the leaping lion. Without a sound he rolled over at the very feet of his intended victims-dead.

For a moment neither the man nor the woman moved. Then the latter opened her eyes to look with wonder upon the dead beast behind her comso that when he went into the forest to hunt that morning he had a feeling of much greater security than at any time since they had been cast upon the savage shore. The result was that he penetrated farther from the shelter than the shelter to the foot of the tree-she lared not venture farther. Here, beide the crude ladder Clayton had constructed for her, she sat looking out to sen in the always surviving hope that a vessel might be sighted.

Her back was toward the jungle, and so she did not see the grasses part or the savage face that peered from between. Little, bloodshot, close set eyes scanned her intently, roving from time to time about the open beach for indications of the presence of others.

Presently another head appeared and then another and another. The man in the shelter commenced to rave again. and the heads disappeared as silently and as suddenly as they had come. mad? > One by one grotesque forms emerged a bloody mist of murder, and the old from the jungle to creep stealthly rustling of the grasses attracted her attention. She turned and at the sight that confronted her staggered to her feet, with a little shrick of fear. Then they closed upon her with a rush. Lifting her bodily in his long, gorilla-like arms, one of the creatures turned and bore her into the jungle. A filthy paw covered her mouth to stifle her screams. Added to the weeks of torture she had niready undergone the shock was more than she could withstand. Shattered nerves collapsed, and she lost con-

When she regained her senses she found herself in the thick of the primeval forest. It was night. A buge fire burned brightly in the little clearing in which she lay. About it squatted fifty frightful men. Their heads and faces long arms rested upon the bent knees of their short, crooked legs. They were gnawing like beasts upon unclean food. A pot boiled upon the edge of the fire. The girl was the first to speak again and out of it one of the creatures would occasionally drag a hunk of meat with a sharpened stick. When they discovered that their captive had regained consciousness a piece of this repulsive stew was tossed to her from the foul hand of a nearby feaster. It rolled close to her side, but she only closed her eyes as a qualm of nausea surged through her.

For many days they traveled through the dense forest. The girl, footsore and exhausted, was half dragged, half pushed through the long, bot, tedious days. Occasionally, when she would manifestations of friendship terrify- stumble and fall, she was cuffed and kicked by the nearest of the frightful men. Long before they reached their journey's end her shoes had been discarded-the soles entirely gone. Her clothes were torn to mere shreds and tatters, and through the pitiful rags her once white and tender skin showed raw and bleeding from contact with the thousand pitiless thorns and brambles have been noble and self sacrificing through which she had been dragged.

The last two days of the journey found her in such utter exhaustion that no amount of kicking and abuse could force her to her poor, bleeding feet. Outraged nature had reached the limit of endurance, and the girl was physically powerless to raise herself even to her knees. As the beasts surrounded her, chattering threateningly the while they goaded her with their cudgels and beat feet, she lay with closed eyes praying deep throated, ominous growls. for the merciful death that she knew | alone could give her surcease from suffering. walls and came to the ruined city within. Into a crumbling pile they bore her, and here she was surrounded by bundreds more of the same creatures that had brought her, but among them were females who looked less horribie. At sight of them the first faint hope that she had entertained came to mitigate her misery. But it was short lived, for the women offered her no sympathy, though, on the other hand. neither did they abuse her.

After she had been inspected to the entire satisfaction of the inmates of the building, she was borne to a dark chamber in the vaults beneath and here upon the bare floor she was left with a metal bowl of water and anoth-

For a week she saw only some of the romen, whose duty it was to bring her food and water. Slowly her strength was returning-soon she would be in fit condition to offer as a sacrifice to One That Should Be Heeded by the flaming god. Fortunate indeed it was that she could not know the fate for which she was destined.

As Tarzan of the Apes moved slowly through the jungle after casting the spear that saved Clayton and Jane Porter from the savage fange of Numa, his mind was filled with all the sorrow that belongs to a freshly opened heart

He was glad that he had stayed his hand in time to prevent the consummation of the thing that in the first mad wave of jealous wrath he had contemplated. Only the fraction of a second had stood between Clayton and death at the hands of the spe-man. In the short moment that had elapsed after he had recognized the girl and her companion and the relaxing of the taut muscles that held the poisoned shaft directed at the Englishman's heart, Tarzan had been swayed by the swift and savage impulses of brute life.

He had seen the woman be cravedhis woman-his mate-in the arms of another. There had been but one course open to him, according to the flerce jungle code that guided him in this other existence, but just before it had become too late the softer sentiment of his inherent chivalry had risen above the flaming fires of his passion and saved him. A thousand times be gave thanks that they bad triumphed before his fingers had released that

As he contemplated his return to the Waziri the idea became repugnant. He through the jungle for a time, until the N. Y. sharp edge of his sorrow had become blunted. Like his fellow beasts he preferred to suffer in silence and alone.

That night he slept again in the amphitheater of the apes, and for several days he hunted from there, returning at night. On the afternoon of the third day he returned early. He had lain stretched upon the soft grass of the circular clearing for but a few moments when he heard far to the south a familiar sound. It was the passing of a band of great apes through the jungle. He could not mistake it. For several minutes he lay listening. They were coming in the direction of the amphitheater.

Tarzan arose lazily and stretched himself. His keep ears followed every movement of the advancing tribe. They were upwind, and presently be caught their scent, though he had not needed this added evidence to assure him that he was right. As they entered the cleared space Tarzan of the Apes melted into the branches upon the other side of the arena. There he waited to inspect the newcomers. Nor had he long to wait. Presently a fierce, bairy face appeared among the lower branches opposite him. The cruel, little eyes took in the clearing at a glance; then there was a chattered report returned to those behind. Tarzan could bear the words. The scout was telling the other members of the tribe that the coast was dose tonight. 25c at your drugclear and that they might enter the amphitheater in safety.

First the leader dropped lightly upon the soft carpet of the grassy floor, and then, one by one, nearly a hundred anthropoids followed him. There were the huge adults and several young. A few nursing babes clung close to the shagry necks of their savage mothers. Tarzan recognized many members of the tribe. It was the same into which he had come as a tiny babe. Many of the adults had been little apes during his boyhood. He had frolicked and played about this very jungle with them during their brief childhood. He wondered if they would remember himthe memory of the ape is not overlong. and two years is an eternity to them.

From the talk which be overheard be learned that they had come to choose a new king-their late chief had fallen a hundred feet beneath a broken limb to an untimely end.

Tarzan walked to the end of an overhanging limb in plain view of them. The quick eyes of a female caught sight of him first. With a barking gutteral she called the attention of the others. Several huge bulls stood erect to get a better view of the intruder. With bared fangs and bristling necks and kicked her with their fists and they advanced slowly toward him with

> "Karnath, I am Tarzan of the Apes," said the ape-man in the vernacular of branches."

> The brute he had addressed stopped with a look of half comprehending, dull wonderment upon his savage face. "And Magor," continued Tarzan, adpaulon. As that beautiful head went up Tarzan of the Apes gave a gasp of heavy spear from the body of the lion.

At last they passed through two great for many seasons?" not the same Tarzan-mighty hunter,

The apes all crowded forward now, but more in curiosity than threatening. They muttered among themselves for a few moments.

"What do you want among us now?" asked Karnath. "Only peace," answered the ape-man. Again the apes conferred. At length Karnath spoke again.

"Come in peace, then. Tarsan of the Apes." he said.

And so Tarzan of the Apes dropped lightly to the turf into the midst of the flerce and hideous borde-he had completed the cycle of evolution and had returned to be once again a brute among brutes.
