WEATHER NICE AGAIN

The weather is very nice again today and existing snow is fast fading from sight. In many ways this has been a most phenomenal winter, but more especially in the matter of relative heat and cold. Some one has said, that with everything going up, up, up, the mercury in the thermometer has gone down, down, down to the lowest mark in years. A general shortage of fuel, has added to the acuteness of the situation and even yet in eastern cities and towns the cold weather menace is continuing. For fourteen straight days in the month of January we had continuous below-zero weather and a large part of February has followed the example which we hoped might be an exception to the rule.
