Tractor Incidents

Many stories of tractor incidents are told as students taking the tractor course at the University of Nebraska. One man, having had his tractor seven years, decided the engine needed cleaning. He started it in a garage and then turned it on to see if it would start. It did and ran the engine on fire and turned the magneto up. Another man heard a fearful noise as the engine whirled turned over. Instead of stopping the tractor he kept it a lot to see if the noise occurred again. A lug had come loose and the second time around swung out and stripped off one of the control levers and the tender. Fortunately a machine should not be run a foot after something has come wrong. Repair men say that more than 40 per cent of their work comes from improper lubrication.

Butchering Demonstration. Mr. Warner of the National Hog-Raising Department will be with us to aid in both killing and cutting up the carcasses. The demonstration will be held on the following dates beginning at 8:30 o'clock: Feb. 10th at Clarence Place; Feb. 11th at F. C. Schomaker, Nebraska; Feb. 12th at Harry Brecker, Greenwood. L. R. FINDES, County Agent.

SHERIFF MAKES BIG CATCH

Chief State Agent Hvers reports that early Tuesday morning Sheriff Quinton of Cass county arrested the driver of a high powered automobile that far from Plattsmouth bridge. The automobile was searched and found to contain the plant of whisky. The driver gave the name of C. W. Parks and his residence as Omaha. The arrest was made at 3 a. m.

The chief state agent says that Sheriff Quinton now holds the honor of bringing down the biggest booze catchment in Nebraska since Mr. Hvers, as state agent, has held the job.

He is afraid of Sheriff Quinton that he had proved a nemesis to bootleggers and other violators of the state prohibitory law.—State Journal.

FARM ELECTRIC PLANS IN THE WAR

The strenuous demands of the War have been the means of bringing to the front many products, or perhaps of developing hitherto unknown uses of well-known products.
For many reasons little could be said about these things while the war was on, but now that the conflict is over many interesting facts are being related about products and measures that were employed to help make our victory certain.
Among the electrical products, one of the most valuable proved to be the small direct connected electric light and power plant. The uses of electricity are nearly universal and it was found absolutely necessary to be able to use it right up on the firing line, on the submarine classes and in other places where the action was fast and furious and where things were liable to happen with astonishing suddenness.

These little air cooled electric plants were found operating X-ray machines in the field hospitals, charging batteries for field telephone sets, for airplane signaling, for running the movie machines at the arm Y's for electric lighting, at any point where electricity would help out. These small electric units made a very flexible system, for they could be advanced or withdrawn as the fortunes of war determined, could be installed in an instant and would be ready to work producing the precious "beep" as promptly as a battery would unlimber and start shelling guns.

The conditions of warfare speedily established the fact that the simplest type of plant was the best—that the lighting plant or the submarine-chaser was no place to have to be dealing with unnecessary attachments or features and there was, of course, some wiring out. But the plant that was simple, efficient and sturdy, the plant that could be depended on in any emergency was used by the thousand and played an important part in beating the Hun.

The efforts of the managers of these two shows to secure good and wholesome pictures are making movie converts out of more people than it was ever thought could be made a few years ago, when the picture industry was not up to the standard of success it has now reached.

Rapidly supplementing the so-called legitimate stage offerings, moving pictures are today unexcelled as educational and entertaining features and it is generally admitted that there is yet in store for them greater successes than they have yet attained.

James Jordan from near Cullom was a visitor in the city this morning coming to look after some business for a short time.

Harvey Burke departed this afternoon for Omaha, where he is visiting with friends and will probably accept a position there.

E. R. Schulhoff was a passenger this morning for Glenwood, Iowa, where he is looking after some business for the day.
