Jealousy is as hard to hide as a THE BREATH OF PESTILENCE

The big slump in the stock market, with heavy selling of securities and the forcing of United States bonds to a new low level, merely reveals the effect of European demoralization, political as well as industrial, upon the prosperity and security of this country.

Even the British pound sterling, long the standard of value the world over, is today worth only about 70 per cent of its face value in the American market-and that means, today, the world market. As for the money of Italy and France, its valuation is immensely more depreciated, and German money is accepted at only about 5 per cent of par.

The back of all Europe is on the point of breaking under the burden t bears; a mountain of debt; exhausted credit; depteted stocks; demoralization of industry; diminish-We will never have universal ing production; governmental inse-

> Not in the height of the war of Prussian autocratic aggression against democracy; not when the Germans were hammering at the gate of Paris; not when the intervention of American arms alone saved the day was European civilization in such deadly, imminent peril of destruction. And never, not even when the war was at the crest of its frightfulness, when its death tolls and destructiveness were most ghastly, was its toll of human agony greater than now, nearly 15 months after Armistice day.

The evil of the world war lives at the start. after it-and mounts daily to more appalling and more nearly unbear-

How it is to be overcome, if overcome at all, is beyond the vision of the wisest men to foresee.

A repudiation of the debts of all the European nations that fought the war, including the allies as well "People are spending money as as the former "central powers" is jectured. And this possibility is fast coming to take on the likeness of a very strong probability.

So keen is the distress of the enente powers that they have about prought themselves to the point of partial recognition of the bolshevist government of Europe, with a view to restoring trade with Russia, whose immense natural resources are direly needed to prevent general collapse and a desolation of anarchy and starvation.

And the German problem is critical. Germany's late enemies are immensely concerned in its stability nensely concerned in the preservation of the present German governnot merely as a bulwark from the east, but as against a bolshevist coup d-etat in Germany it self. It is feared that should the existing democratic government go down it would be succeeded by a government of red radicalism. And it is realized that pressure for the surrender of notable German war offenders, as stipulated in the treaty of Versailles, put the German government in grave danger of over- (E1/2. throw. At the same time it is realized that to yield that demand would establish a precedent for the non-en-thirty-two (32), all in Township ten forcement of the treaty that might speedily convert it into only anoth-"scrap of paper."

What every government in Europe must have, if it is to survive, is the re-establishment of trade and industry, the stimulation of production, and all these are predicated upon the establishment of commerce

But the United States is still at war with Germany! It is still at of war is ended the part America must play in re-establishing peace cannot be undertaken. And that state of war will continue to exist until the peace treaty, delayed for months in the senate, is disposed of.

However good or bad the treaty of Versailles may have been, wise or unwise in its terms and exactions, the one way that now exists to make that peace real, and to make it just and workable, is through the instrumentality of the league of nations with the United States a wise, judicious and justice-serving member of

Because of the absence of the all other United States the league today is little better than a paper league. It cannot function vigorously. It lacks effectiveness and power. It lacks promise and hope. It is impotent to revive faith and order and industry. Europe is prostrate and hungry, and its mind is being poisoned by the doctrines of despair. Meanwhile the senate fiddles. And meanwhile, too, the United States is beginning to feel on its cheek the hot and pestilential breath that blows from the fetid nostils of a decaying Europe.
