The Continent, a religious weekly, asks "Why, after all, is it so hard to Americanize the immigrant?" He comes to America, it is suggested, prejudiced in its favor. what brings him here. It ought to be easy to strengthen that prejudice and develop a real American spirit

The Continent answers its own question by saying that the trouble is that "the immigrant has not found friends among the Americans."

There is a large part of the whole case stated in that sentence. Americanize the foreigner, the American must be his friend, but the trouble is that the real American has failed to be a friend in a majority of cases. The immigrant has been left on his arrival to shift for himself as exploited labor or as an improperly related and unabsorbed contribution to the surplus population in congested industrial centers and little or nothing has been dome to locate him properly and adjust him to conditions best calculated to meet his anticipation as to the benefits to be enjoyed as a citizen of General fund..... $ 55,000.00 19-4w.
