Will Appeal Ballot Grouping Decision

Coolidge and Johnson Men to Ask Spillman For Reverse Opinion; Democratic Meet. Omaha.

Lincoln, March 18.—An appeal will be taken to Attorney General Spillman when he returns to his office tomorrow after a week's absence in Chicago, from the decision of his assistant, Lee W. Basye, in which Basye held that the names of candidates to the republican national convention must be placed in primary ballots together, without regard for grouping in Coolidge and Johnson "slates."

The decision was handed down by Basye yesterday in reply to a query from W. D. McHugh, election commissioner of Douglas county.

Frank Corrick, manager of the Coolidge campaign; Frank Harrison, manager for Hiram Johnson, and Dr. T. W. Bass, secretary of the republican state committee, were all up in arms over the decision today. Without a clear distinction on the face of the ballot to show which are the Coolidge delegates and which the Johnson group, and with the further necessity of rotating the names until Johnson men and Coolidge men are all jumbled together, it would be practically impossible to elect a set of delegates who would be pledged for any single candidate for president, republican managers are protesting.

"I could not pick out the Coolidge or Johnson slate myself if the names were mixed," Dr. Bass declared today.

Secretary of State Pool declared this afternoon that he rather expected the decision of his assistant when he returns tomorrow. Pool pointed out that a further mixup is caused by the fact that the district delegates from each of the six districts would not be separated under the decision of Basye if the delegates from each district would have to be voted upon by the voters of the whole state.

COOLIDGE EXPLAINS LANG INCIDENT

Debate Stirred up in the Senate Over Dismissal of Passion Players.

Washington, March 17.—President Coolidge's action in cutting short Saturday a program of addresses at his reception to the Oberammergau Passion players brought an explanation from the White House today and stirred up a debate in the senate.

In a letter to Anton Lang, the "Christus" of the players, Mr. Coolidge expressed pleasure that the visitors had come to the White House and set forth that the only reason for the incident was the fact that it is not permissible for the president to receive public addresses from people of other nations except through diplomatic channels.

The incident was taken up in the senate by Senator Dill, democrat of Washington, who said he regretted that the president "had not a broader and more humane view of the delegation's plea in behalf of suffering German children."

President Coolidge told the players in his letter that he wished to correct a "possible wrong impression" in regard to the incident, and reiterated his pleasure at seeing them; his appreciation of their work and his hope for the success of their visit to America. Injection into the visit by Ludwig Nissen, spokesman for the players, of what White House officials described as "political discussions" was followed by the cutting short of other addresses.

"The president probably was technically correct," Senator Dill said in addressing the senate, "but I think a much better way would have been to give a few minutes to the men who, in the eyes of the world, embody the Christ idea and at the end to have told him that the matter he brought up was a departmental matter, and while the president sympathized heartily he would be unable to initiate action. It is to be regretted that he took such a hard-practical view of the situation."
