BEAUTY AND BONDS

I will feed the flock of the slaughter, even you, O poor of the flock. And I took unto me two staves; the one I called Beauty, and the other I called Bonds; and I fed the flock.

Bad colds are still prevalent. Beware of the brides of March. Lots of people break in new friends every year.

The early worm will soon be here and get fished with. Short skirts don't give the March winds much to blow about.

Better get used to the March wind. It will last until June, maybe.

Alaska wants to be a state. What, with a legislature and all that!

One certain thing about spring is everything seems so uncertain.

Raise a garden even if you have to borrow the tools from a neighbor.

The grass is green and the trees soon will be, and then we will have spring.

In Manila the horse races are held early in the morning, leaving all day for cursing.

A New Jersey man struck a match to see if he had any gas. Now he hasn't any car.

The future is coming, but we won't enjoy it very much unless we are ready for it.

The crop of winter wheat is reported very backward in many sections of Nebraska.

Reports from China indicate that the Confucian there is becoming worse confounded.

You simply cannot tell who is general manager unless you want something for nothing.

In Seattle, an auto driver ran into a new building going up, so can claim it was going the wrong way.

It has become almost as hazardous to belong to a Chinese tong as it is to be a law abiding American citizen.

When you get stung by a bee you soon get over it, but it's not that way when you get stung by matrimony.

The Pacific ocean is being measured again. If they find the middle it will be a fine place for a singing school.

One mean old bachelor says the nice thing about a baby is the way it puts its cute little sticky hands all over your $60 suit.

The manufacture and sale of "hooch" still goes on, and so do the salaries of prohibition agents. And there seems to be but little decrease in sales.

The British definition of drunkenness is "when one takes enough alcohol to be a nuisance or a danger to himself or others." It seems to take not more than two drinks to do that to a motorist.

The University of Chicago will publish a dictionary, which will take ten years to complete. By that time, all the earlier words will have become obsolete, in Chicago, and they can start right in on the new edition.

William Jennings Bryan is now a millionaire—become such, the news relates, through investment in Florida real estate. The report will astonish many and shock but a few. We experience neither of those reactions. Some have it seems.

The prime need of the servants of this great government of ours is training in the gentle art of expression. It is our well-considered opinion that the person, or persons, who prepared the income tax blanks simply collected a lot of cross-word puzzles, already solved, picked up words at random and put them together recklessly. We couldn't make anything of the jumble, and we have long enjoyed the writings of Shakespeare and John Milton, too.

To prosper, be a conformist. You can live a long time if you don't do much else. Long skirts had to go. They were considered effeminate.

A man can be pretty smart, but never pretty and smart. A cynic is a man who mistakes cheerfulness for ignorance.

Mind your P's and Q's and you won't always be in a stew. Lincoln fears more smallpox, and Omaha fears more bandits.

Lent will soon be over and then you may get back your borrowed umbrella. Japanese ambassador deprecates the possibility of war with the United States.

Outside of jail the smallest place on earth is a room in a boarding house in spring. Philanthropist—a man who wears his wrist watch upside down for the benefit of others.

The man who tells a girl he would die for her wouldn't be so rash if he had ever tried it. A hick town is a place where everybody recognizes the cars parked along the dark roads.

Moreover, those stooping exercises in the daily golf put one in shape for spading the garden. Women are good looking but peculiar. They want their clothes all just alike only different.

We asked one of our citizens the other day if he had an auto and his reply was: "No, I have a Ford!" You can do anything unlawful in these progressive times and get away with it, if you have the right lawyer.

High noses may indicate the people are stuck up. Or they may indicate some neighbor is cooking cabbage. A New York man found his wife safely married to a freeman in Los Angeles, showing there was no need to worry.

Both the president and the vice president have incited the national lawmakers to verse, and if the verse had been clever it might have been forgiven.

People will stay up until 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning listening over their radios, but wouldn't get up at midnight even to hear Gabriel blow his horn.

In order to detect escaping gas more readily, Little Rock, Ark., has added an extra odor to it. Which is a bit like painting the lily and gilding refined gold.

A bunch of soldiers from Fort Crook are with us again out on the rifle range. Welcome, boys, to our city. Glad to see you. Come as often as you can.

We see there is a town in Pennsylvania by the name of Shickshinny. We don't know who is to blame and only mention it for the benefit of the cross-word puzzle-makers.

As long as a girl lets you spend your money on her freely you are safe. It's when she begins to try and get you to economize that you are near the brink of matrimony.

A correspondent, describing Harold Bell Wright, says the novelist re-writes some sentences as many as a dozen times. There are critics who would say that in Harold's case that is not enough.

An eastern university professor contends that there are 650,000 feeble-minded persons at large in this country. Well, if they're at large they evidently have sense enough to keep out of the insane asylums.

Gloria Swanson is back home and was accorded a reception fit for a queen. She has placed the management of her affairs in the hands of her husband, The Marquis Henri de la Falaise. Watch your P's and Q's, Gloria.

WHEN COOLIDGE DECIDES

A very interesting analysis of the mental processes of President Coolidge has been given by the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, a supporter of the president and for years a close observer of his public career. Noting "the general disappointment" that Mr. Coolidge did not veto the bill raising the salaries of representatives and senators, thus throwing "the entire responsibility on the legislative branch" which "he must now share," the Republican admits that as a result "his economy plume is perceptibly ruffled," and expresses the opinion that he carefully weighed "the price he pays for yielding" again "such advantages as may accrue from avoidances of a conflict in closer co-operation between the executive and congress in putting through the administration's program at the next session."

The friendly Massachusetts editor then gives a picture of the working of the president's mind which indicates not only lack of decision but a disposition to place good policy above right for its own sake—as follows: "It is characteristic of Mr. Coolidge that until action takes place by which he becomes irrevocably committed no decision or conclusion, his mind may favor assumes any finality. A question remains open until it is closed by circumstances. Conversely, it accounts for his characteristic reluctance throughout his career to commit himself on any public question concerning which he is not required to express an opinion. By these methods he instinctively seeks to reduce to a minimum the number of his mistakes. Many other public men have followed a similar course. The late Sir John Macdonald, the Canadian statesman, describes the method graphically in saying that he never made up his mind how to vote in the house of commons until he walked across the floor to line up in the division."

REGARDING COLDS

With colds more or less prevalent in Plattsmouth and elsewhere during the last few months, they have commonly been ascribed to weather conditions. It is pointed out that the sudden changes in temperature are largely responsible. Persons dress too thinly or warmly, or sit in rooms that are chilly or that perhaps are not sufficiently heated.

This is all true, and no doubt the weather conditions and our own heedlessness increase the number of colds. But attention is called by the Popular Science Monthly to the fact that we are prone to blame the weather for far too many disorders of the head or nose or throat. In substantiation of this opinion, it is pointed out that colds have their seasonal outbreak throughout the country, that the warm south suffers along with the snowy north, that outbreaks occur at almost the same time in Chicago and Boston, and New Orleans and San Francisco.

Also, persons in those climates where much of life is spent in the out-of-doors are affected along with those who must of necessity, on account of the extreme cold, keep close indoors during most of the winter. Finally, the conclusion is reached by Popular Science, and this opinion is doubtless that of many physicians who have dealt with the stubborn epidemics of colds, that germs are largely responsible.

"The common cold is extremely contagious," it states. "It does not come from bad weather or wet feet, but from germs that attack those whose physical condition makes them susceptible."

"Each of us, on an average, suffers from 3.7 colds a year. 'Colds make no distinction between youth and age. But indoor workers and city dwellers seem more susceptible than those who have outdoor occupations or who live in the country."

"October is the worst time of the year for colds. Another bad month is January. June is the month in which you are least likely to catch cold."

And while all that is doubtless true, it yet behooves people to keep out of droughts and to dress properly and to be sure their feet are dry, and to exercise all other reasonable precautions during the period of variable weather.

NEWSPAPERS IN SCHOOLS

For some time past newspapers have been used in educational institutions to develop certain features of such work, but it is probably something new announced from Chicago when the principal of one of the public school departments of that big city intimates that he will require pupils of the seventh and eighth grades to read the daily newspapers. This innovation was discussed and favorably commented upon at the recent meeting of educators in Cincinnati and may be taken up

CATTLE DRIVING IN EARLY DAYS IN PLATTSMOUTH

Plattsmouth at One Time Was Visited by Herds of Thousands of Texas Cattle.

The presentation here of the picture, "North of 36," which depicted the great cattle drives from the Texas ranches to the northern railroad points, brought to mind to some of the real old timers of this city similar incidents in the seventies in this community.

At that time, the middle of the seventies, the railroad projected by the Burlington had not as yet been started on the Nebraska side of the Missouri river and the terminal was at Pacific Junction or East Plattsmouth as it was sometimes called.

In conversation with the Journal reporter a few days ago, one of the old time residents here stated that in the year 1877, as he recollected it, there arrived in this city a drove of Texas longhorns, wild and worn from their long drive from the plains of western Texas. There were from 7,000 to 9,000 head of cattle and they presented a great sight as they were driven down through the streets of the then straggling little settlement along the Missouri river.

While the cattle were being driven through this city they suddenly became frightened and a wild stampede occurred. They broke from all restraint and dashed to all parts of the city. All of the old time picket fences that adorned the resident section of the city was broken down and the longhorns scattered all over this section, it taking days and days to round them up and get them ready to make the ford over the river.

Several of the cattle were located as far west as Louisville and all over this section of the country for days there were portions of the herd found.

So it can be seen that this city has had a part in the romance and stir that marked the great epics of the western pioneers in the making of the nation.

Broadcasting Station in Plattsmouth On the Air

HOW DO YOU DO? This is station BESCO broadcasting by stenographic control from Plattsmouth. Like Omaha, 20 miles away, we are surrounded by the United States and boosters for our products.

The first number on the program will be "What Has Become of Carbon," by A. Carowner. This selection is dedicated to the Garage Men's Benevolent Association, words contained in booklet titled "Bertschy Duplex By-Pass," music by any old or new car.

By an ingenious combination of well known principles and unique mechanical features the By-Pass unit utilizes the commonly wasted by-products from motors, in a controllable, practical manner, to remove and prevent carbon, reduce fuel consumption, increase life and efficiency of lubricant and increase motor power with smoother operation. The securing of these conditions has long been desired but never before actually obtained. With the By-Pass these results are guaranteed. You shall be the judge. There is nothing like it—nothing that even remotely approaches the By-Pass, either in design or performance. It is an 18 Karat Knock Out. You should get better acquainted with us and our product.

Sorry, folks, our time is up. For the benefit of those who tuned in late our wave length is $12.50. Our next period in the chair will be any old time immediately after we declared the coming of the American fleet with a knock out card or letter telling us how you enjoyed our program.

We will next broadcast that volatile selection by the Gasoline Sextet, "The Pal that I Loved Stole the Well that I Loved," dedicated to Dentist Tall Do-ra-me; music by Pot Tee Dome.

It is now exactly the opportune time for you to get in touch with us. Address, By-Pass Station BESCO, Plattsmouth, Neb. Announcer A. J. P. B. signing off. Thank you.
