PURPOSE IN LIFE

Montaigne said of society: "It is difficult to find it in a dozen men who direct their lives toward a certain definite purpose which is the principal aid of wisdom."
One advantage of having to earn a living is that it subjects one necessarily to discipline. The great fault of people in the social world is that they are idlers; they have nothing to do; they suffer from a lack of purpose.
One of the greatest curses that can happen to a human being is to be condemned to a life without toil. All great moral movements have started with the working classes. The idle classes do nothing but raise the devil.
They have a certain facility of speech, but they lack the power of concentrating on intelligent thought. Their intelligence, or rather lack of intelligence, is masked by wit, or a ready ability to use brilliant words. All their real and noble sentiments tend to disintegrate. Love becomes gallantry, ambition becomes intrigue. The whole atmosphere of society is such that normal sentiment cannot grow to maturity.
In it an energetic sentiment is out of place.
For proof of this you have only to read the modern society novel with its total lack of moral background and lack of appreciation of anything that is simple and great.
The trouble with these people is that they put forth no consistent effort.
"O, God," said Leonard de Vinci, "you sell us everything for the price of an effort." But effort is the very thing which society people avoid.
One of the worst afflictions in the world is boredom or sophistication, yet it is made a virtue by society people.
As they have no work they have no real rest. As the soul is unemployed in noble sentiments, resort is had to wine, wild parties, gambling and the like.
Life is not long for such people. Society is instinctively the stronghold of dead traditions, religious orthodoxy and reactionary ideas. It is therefore a tremendous power which is opposed to progress.
All of the noblest sentiments are perverted. Personal loyalty becomes loyalty to the clan. A man, for instance, is not blamed for seducing a girl outside of the clan, but marriage to an outsider is considered a crime.
The whole group perhaps is characterized, more than anything else, by its tendency to look down with contempt upon physical labor. In fact almost all of the upper classes in this world have been composed of idlers.
All that has been said does not imply that there is no advantage of culture and refinement, by meeting the right people, reading the right books and forming the right associations. But all this should be done under the influence of a lofty and steady purpose to be of some use in the world.
A BILLION FOR HOMES
George W. Hinman, a writer on economics, says a billion a year is spent for new homes in America—an amazing sum; but it proves that the makers of cosmetics, chewing gum and automobiles are not getting all the money that's made. Mr. Hinman's comment is extended, but we quote one paragraph:
"Of 26,000,000 families in the United States about 12,000,000 are supposed to own their own homes. If the number could be increased to 15,000,000 such an increase would be the best guarantee of stable American conditions and steady American progress in business that anyone could imagine."
Many people tell Mr. Hinman that in their opinion building is being overdone, but he doubts this. It is overdone here and there, he says, but not generally. Proof that we are not over-building to any great extent is the fact that the activity continues. Men do not continue to put money into enterprises that promise no return. There is a demand for new homes.
A BUM SHOW
Regardless of what may be the jury verdict, this much may be said of the evolution trial at Dayton:
First: It won't prove anything.
Second: Nothing will be said on either side that has not already been said—and said much better than the attorneys on contending sides are able to say it.
In a word, the much-touted "big show" in Tennessee is all "old stuff" from start to finish. It is not even in the hands of capable performers.
For the prosecution there is not a man who can qualify as a first class theologian, and for the defense there is not a real scientist.
Under these circumstances the very best we can hope for is a "bum show."

EARTHQUAKES

We read in the Chicago Journal of Commerce of "the reluctance of people to live in or invest capital in any section in which there is more than a mere possibility of an earthquake." And yet human conduct in the matter, as recorded in history, does not indicate that this alleged reluctance has been strong enough to have any considerable effect on men's actions.
We do not have to go far from stricken Santa Barbara for an illustration. It is only 19 years since San Francisco was stricken by the most disastrous earthquake that has ever fallen upon any part of the United States. And yet those 19 years have seen a large increase in both the wealth and the population of the city, which, at first thought, seemed to have been demolished beyond hope of recovery.
Certain and continuing advantages draw people together in certain localities; and if those advantages are great, the knowledge that residence there is attended by possible but not certain disaster will not keep them away. The farms and farmers' villages that dot the sides of Mount Aetna are more numerous today than ever before, although the crater has poured destructive and death-dealing floods of molten lava over them again and again, ever since Sicilians first became aware of the rich agricultural possibilities of the disintegrated lava on those dangerous slopes.
Men are terrified by the earthquake or the volcanic eruption when it brings ruin or threat of ruin right to their homes; when it is over, they rebuild their damaged properties and go bravely on. It is a trait of the human mind to ignore disaster. Hundreds of thousands of persons have been killed in years ago by the flow of lava from Mount Vesuvius, yet generation after generation builds villages around the base of the volcano, and in full knowledge of the fact that its eruptions are frequent and violent.

EDUCATION

Nicholas Murry Butler, president of Columbia university, once said there are five evidences of education. Let's us examine them briefly, each of the evidence. See what you think about them.
The first evidence is the correct and precise use of your own language. Most of us speak English and it is the finest instrument for the communication of ideas ever devised. We are inevitably to be judged on our ability to use the tools of thought correctly.
Refined and gentle manners are the second evidence. Not mere parade manners to be polished up and exhibited on occasion, but manners that are the outward expression, as Mr. Butler says, of a fixed habit of thought.
And then there is the power and habit of reflection. Have we headline minds? We are accused of it. We go glancing through life. It has been said a life that asks no questions of itself is simply the life of the lower animal. It is man's high business to wonder and to seek the answer, to hope and to have faith. Education involves the power and habit of reflection.
Fourth is the power of growth. Of course, that means the power to change and adapt, no matter what age you may be. As we grow older it is increasingly harder not to be bound hard and fast by custom and tradition. Old men who can still take on ideas and adjust themselves to new ideas always attract our admiration. Such men have real education.

Lastly, an evidence of education is the power to do. That might be expressed by the over-worked word "efficiency." If we simply know but do not know how to do, we are not equipped for life, we are not truly educated. There is in the world, as Mr. Butler says, a great deal of well-informed incapacity.
James of Harvard was right. Our job is to convert our right impulses into some form of useful activity. The power to do is one of the great essentials.
Think over these evidences. Check yourself up by them.
A Philadelphian who has mastered the mathematics of Revelations finds heaven much more spacious than anything we have known. Each angel, he says, has a five-room house with 20-foot ceilings. We suspect that the house they will put him in will be bigger than that.
People are very snarly in hot weather, but not in the way that produces civil war. In war, sides are chosen and it is necessary to fraternize with one's partisans. In hot weather, there is little danger of anybody fraternizing with anybody.
Italy has extended to its women the right to vote and to fight in time of war, but as yet has been unable to devise a law which will compel them to descend from a street car correctly.
ROHSE SHOE PITCHERS BATTLE
From Friday's Daily—
The championship honors of the horseshoe pitchers of the city are still resting in the first ward as the result of the meeting last night between the Hilltoppers, representing the dwellers in the vicinity of Eleventh and Main streets and the Riverside team, composed of the residents on the North Third street hill.
Not only was the ambitions of the Hilltoppers shattered last evening but the junior Riverside team made a sad dent in the record of their youthful foes from west Main street.
The battle was staged on the North 3rd street park, whither early in the evening George Sayles and Harley Burdick had hastened, laden down with their own special horseshoes, to meet in combat John Iverson and Homer Shrader. The Main street invaders were accompanied by George Sayles Jr., and Ralph Mason, who were to combat with Mr. Iverson, Jr., and "Buzzer" Walling, the youthful champion of the east part of the city.
The big battle between the adults resulted in the Riverside team winning seven games while the Hilltoppers were able to annex only one of the games. In this struggle John Iverson, the mighty blacksmith, smashes all records by making sixteen ringers, two of which were doubles. Homer Shrader secured one ringer while George Sayles annexed five ringers and Burdick three, but against the masterful hurling of Iverson the visitors were sadly outclassed.
In the junior game the Hilltoppers won 4 and the Riverside boys annexed two which was a very pleasing showing for the more youthful first warders. In the ringer Edmund Walling secured 5, Iverson, 2, Ralph Mason, 3, and George Sayles none, but Certificate No. 5710 in the office of the Treasurer of Cass county, Nebraska, covering the following described real estate, to-wit: East half of Lot 7 in Block 5, in South Bend, in Cass county, Nebraska:

GET RID OF THAT BACKACHE

Plattsmouth People Point the Way.
The constant aching of a bad back. The weariness, the tired feeling; Headaches, dizziness, nervousness, Distressing urinary disorders— Are often signs of failing kidneys And too serious to be neglected. Get rid of these troubles with a kidney cure—Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Hosts of people recommend Doan's. This is a Plattsmouth case. You can verify it.
Mrs. Maggie Kaufman, 624 S. 6th street, says: "I felt weak and depressed and my housework was a burden. Every move I made sent sharp pains across my back and my back was so sore I could hardly rest at night. I became dizzy and had headaches, too. My kidneys were weak and acted irregularly. I used one box of Doan's Pills and they cured the trouble. It is very seldom I need anything to stimulate my kidneys."
Mrs. Kaufman is only one of many Plattsmouth people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Pills. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney cure—ask distinctly for DOAN'S PILLS, the same that Mrs. Kaufman had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 60 cents at all dealers.
