THE SONS OF GOD

Beloved, now we are the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is.

BILLION-DOLLAR INDUSTRY

The daily attendance at the movies fluctuates between 13,000,000 and 20,000,000. Put in another way, this means that somebody in every family in the United States sees a picture every day. The receipts of the motion picture theatres amount to about $1,000,000,000 annually. The popularity of the movies is bringing those engaged in the industry a rich harvest. But the expenses are colossal and not every producer is ahead of the game, by any means. The increasing popularity is attended by increasing responsibility. Fortunately, men like Will Hayes have been called to power in the industry and are bending their energy and ability toward directing its destinies into wiser channels than those which marked them a few years ago. Then the movies apparently were headed straight for the rocks. The danger is not nearly so great now as then, and each year it is becoming less.

MOTOR CARS ON CREDIT

Whether the purchase of automobiles on credit has been carried beyond the limits of prudence and safety is a proper topic for discussion by the National Association of Finance Companies, by bankers and by the officials of motor corporations. Warnings against the abuse of credit should be welcomed by all enlightened men of affairs.

No longer is the automobile a mere luxury. To millions it is a necessity. To other millions it is a means of wholesome recreation. The wise use of credit it is truly urged, is legitimate in any industry, and the automobile industry is no exception. Many persons buy homes, furniture, rugs, books and clothing on the installment plan. There is no reason why persons with fair prospects should not buy automobiles in a similar way. Many thousands do.

But indiscriminate extension of credit is fraught with danger to any industry. Persons who cannot afford a given article should not be persuaded to buy it on easy payments, for there are times when easy payments are not easy—or even possible.

It is important for the manufacturer—as well as for the finance corporation—to make reasonably sure that motor cars sold on easy payments in good times will remain sold in times of recession and reduced earnings.

HEALTHY COWS

The Veterinary Director-General of Canada announced recently that there are about 1,200,000 tuberculous cattle in the country. This is about 12 per cent of all Canadian cattle, and any old world country can show about the same as in the United States.

Two policies are being aggressively pursued to hasten the elimination of the disease. In three sections already listed, each of which is fairly large, bovine tuberculosis has been completely wiped out. All cattle have been tested and every diseased animal has been slaughtered.

The other policy is the development of disease-free herds. Under this plan herd owners apply to the government for regular annual tests, promptly eliminating any infected cattle and so building up an accredited herd.

This policy is also followed in America. It is a sort of work that spreads with progress. A dairyman or farmer who has done his part to eliminate the disease on his farm isn't pleased if his neighbors leave their cattle untested. A community spirit of co-operation in the matter is created. The work that is being carried on to get people to drink more milk and to insure that every child has its quota, the importance of healthy herds is obvious.

Wilda Bennett, actress, is going to have to pay $37,000 damages for love theft. What can the poor theatrical managers, already frantic over high salaries, do in the face of a precedent so likely to treble the costs of living in the theatrical profession?

THE FEDERAL TAX HARVEST

Taxes on personal income for 1924 have yielded the government a greater revenue by $25,482,680 than did similar taxes for 1923. This result was revealed in figures prepared by the Internal Revenue Bureau and published in the Sunday papers.

It is an astounding result. If it is gratifying in that it exceeds all expectations and forecasts it is also bewildering. It has scrambled the estimates and calculations of the Treasury Department. It leaves Mr. Mellon's expert accountants flat on their backs, and the astute secretary himself out on a limb.

For no such bumper yield was in the books. When the present revenue act was being prepared, which reduced the rates on small incomes, in defiance of the "Mellon plan," doleful consequences were predicted. Prosperity's pinions were going to droop and industry slow down unless the taxes on wealth were lightened. But congress, with the radical element known as the La Follette bloc holding the balance of power, proceeded to write a revenue law of its own, and, instead of disaster, a harvest of abundance has followed.

This is the outstanding fact of the Internal Revenue Bureau's statistical analysis of taxation conditions under the present law as compared with the preceding law. The comparison discloses a number of interesting developments. It shows there were three incomes of $5,000-10,000 or more last year as in 1923, and that in the million-dollar class the number—74—was the same in both years. It shows a substantial increase in the number of incomes below a million and above $50,000. It places the people's aggregate net income at 25 billions. The average income is fixed at $3,428.55. It paints a land of such plenty as was never before known. But the staggering fact is that increase in revenue notwithstanding the decrease of nearly 400,000 in the number of returns.

In the light of that fact it is clear that the Treasury Department's prestige as a counsellor of revenue legislation is shattered. The revelation coming at this time, as the draft of a new revenue measure is nearing completion, has stirred Washington. The new revenue measure, it is reported, will provide for a searching investigation of the entire system of administering federal taxes by a committee to be appointed by the president, which will file its report Jan. 1, 1927. Meantime the special senate committee to investigate the Internal Revenue Bureau has finished its labors. Its report is now being written by the chairman, Senator Hughson, who will propose a number of changes for adoption at the coming session.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch

TWO FAMILIES

"There are," said Cervantes, "but two families in the world, Have-much and Have-little." Have-little has a collateral branch, a kind of sub-family, and its name is Have-naught. The two are so nearly akin that it is sometimes very difficult to distinguish between them. Indeed, one may, at one time or another, find himself enrolled in any of these families.

The Community Welfare Association calls upon the family of Have-much to give in accordance with its means. It also makes an appeal to the family of Have-little, for even this family has the privilege of aiding those who are less fortunate.

The Community Welfare Association gives aid in a practical way to the families which, usually through no fault of their own, have fallen into destitution. This is not a work of promiscuous and aimless charity. There are, of course, some families that sickness or death has rendered almost helplessly dependent. But in the vast majority assistance, aid given to tide over a bad time. Immediate suffering is relieved, but at the same time encouragement and practical help are given to preserve self-respect and to inspire re-establishment on a self-supporting basis.

On the lines of Cervantes' appraisal the human race probably cannot ever be lumped as one family. There will always be the family of Have-little. But there should never be a family of Have-naught. The last represents not only distress but also danger to the community. The Community Welfare Association does what is useful to bring comfort to the comfortless and to save the community from the peril of desperation.
