FOR I WAS AN HUNGERED

For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me.

THEY RECKON WITH US

It is, of course, no news to us Americans that we are the center of the world.

We have always been the center. In fact, the home town of each of us has always been the center of the country and of the world, and each one individually has been the center of that town.

Human nature is that way.

But, getting up on the mountain top and surveying the world impersonally, is an exceedingly new thing.

Ten years ago, Europe was as little concerned with us as we were with Europe. The history of our world had taken place mostly in Europe, and the center of most things was still there.

We were a great, new, crude people, interested in our sheer bigness and in our childish pride in it. The "certain condescension in foreigners" still applied to us, and some of us still had inferiority complex enough to accept it.

Not now. We may be unpopular and misunderstood, but we are never ignored.

What we do or think about things is more considered than what anyone else does. We have become the financial and industrial center of the world, and are potentially its chief political and military factor.

If we are idealistic, as we were during and immediately following the war, the whole world rises to our inspiration.

If we suffer a sordid reaction, as we are doing, so does the world.

If we will wear Paris fashions, they are the world's styles. If we refuse Paris will change them. Nobody likes us—great success is never loved—everybody reckons with us.

It is a new experience, to be thus taken at what had always been our own valuation.

We are the center of things in time, as well as in space and importance. That, too, is always human nature.

Time consists of past, present and future, and its center is whatever instant we happen to be living.

But, just to be more self-centered, consider some of the reasons why we will be also a center of attention a thousand years from now.

Life became human with two inventions—fire and stone tools. Then for countless ages man roamed the world with no change beyond slight improvements in those tools and the things made with them.

Then came a few thousand years of bronze and few hundred of iron.

Then one more major invention, the alphabet, and intellectual and social progress began.

Several thousands of years of ups and downs, and finally two more major inventions—gunpowder and the printing press.

Then, for the first time, the world speeded up. And then the steam engine, the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, electric light and motor, the bicycle, the automobile, the airplane and the radio.

A long list, but nearly all of it with its social and intellectual consequences, almost in the last second of the last minute of the last hour of man's day on earth.

Whatever may happen in the future, to transform the external or the internal life of man, he will have to look back on these few generations as having made more changes than a hundred ages before.

HUMAN MOTHS

There is a warning for stage-struck mortals in a dispatch out of Hollywood. It states that there are 49,000 "extras" hanging on the outskirts of 4,000 jobs there. Trains, boats and automobiles are bringing to the center of blindom individuals of every type, character and station in life. Ministers who have deserted their flocks, beauty prize winners, wealthy young men and women, miners, doctors, tramps, stenographers and shop girls are seeking "self-expression" in art and a career before calcium lights.

It is a hodge-podge of humanity, we are told, that is gathered at Hollywood, drama more closely packed with life and its pitifulness than the pictures manufactured there.

These human moths in many instances are barely eking out an existence. So seriously has the situation become that one prominent picture association has authorized a survey of the employment conditions. The state government has even taken cognizance of the situation and has sent an investigator. Such a picture as this should bring to many who have the "great yearning" to forget it; but vanity is hard to kill.

Elks Pay Tribute to Their Departed Members Sunday

the shade of the valley of death and who live now but in the mystic realm of retrospection and in the ever-abiding and consoling hope of a spiritual renewal of our love and friendship in the promised land beyond the grave.

"When the flowers so beautiful,"
 The Father gave a name.
 Back came a little blue-eyed one,
 All timidly, it came,
 And standing at its Father's feet,
 And gazing in his face.
 It said in low and trembling tones,
 "Dear God, the name thou gavest me Was this?"
 "Nay, my child, not that."
 "Kindly the Father looked down,
 And said 'Forget-me-not.'
 "This beautiful and timid flower
 Is alike our symbol and inspiration on such occasions, for we have then come from the busy haunts of men, have for the time left our homes and families, and have journeyed in pilgrimage to the silent white city in order that we might garland the little, narrow, earthly habitation of our brothers with the richest flowers that bloom in the season when Spring and Summer meet, the tiny Forget-me-not,
 the glorious roses of love, the amaranth of immortality and the clinging ivy of devoted friendship.
 "When the wind has had been thrown open and the crisp morning air and beautiful sunshine pervades
 the room, with his departing breath, Goethe, the great German poet, said
 "Bring me flowers, bring me flowers,"
 "That great mind realized that his span of life was rapidly drawing to a close; that his physical strength was fading away and he longed to gaze upon those beautiful fragrant gifts of Nature, that are too sweet, too pure, too beautiful to endure for long; that spring from Mother Nature, live their short day and sink down again upon her sympathetic bosom, their mission of love and consolation accomplished. So we wind our way to those lovely spots on that day, laden with Nature's choicest flowers, that we may strew them upon blooms, which are emblematical of all that is pure, all that is good, and all that is noble in nature.

union that is welded together by those imperishable bonds of Charity, Justice, Brotherly Love and Fidelity, a body of men who believe in 'doing unto others as you would have them do unto you,' who believe that each brother shall be rewarded as he shall deserve, men who stand ready to hear the cry of affliction, to aid those in distress, comrades who are seeking one and the same end through possibly divergent paths, but who all stand shoulder to shoulder in the great religion of the Fatherhood of God and the creed of Brotherhood of Man, and their political unity in that one great flag.

"Few men suspect, perhaps no man comprehends, the extent of the support given by religion to the virtues of life. We are unconscious how much our moral social sentiments are fed from this fountain. How powerless conscience would become without a belief in God? What would be the result if the idea of a Supreme Being, of accountability, and of a future Virtue, duty, principle, would be mocked and spurned as unmeaning sounds. A sordid self interest would man would become in fact, what the theory of atheism declares him to be,—a companion for brutes.

"The irrepressible thought of all ages is that there is but one God. We, as Elks, are united in the acknowledgment of one Great Force—the Father of all. Inasmuch as we are of one Father then we are brothers—hence our Creed, The Brotherhood of Man.

"The Order of Elks is distinctively American. We have made the flag of our country the symbol of the crowning virtue of our order. Every Elk believes in the traditions and ideals of America. His faith in America is unshakable. Not only an Elk, but the whole world looks to America as the land of brotherhood and opportunity. To be an American is to love America and serve America. It is not an unfounded statement to say this is the land of freedom, where one is free to worship God as he pleases, free to earn his living so long as the method he chooses is lawful, and where one has the right to use and enjoy property. But with all these privileges there are duties with rights, the paramount of which is obedience to law and constituted authority.

"America is fittingly called 'the meeting place of all peoples.' Here is a land of all peoples and races—a land of all creeds and religions. It is the world's great experimental station of 'The Brotherhood of Man.'

"American liberty is peculiarly different from any other of the whole world. We enjoy the peculiar qualities of being civilly and politically equal.

"When freedom from her mountain height
 Unfurled her standard
 She tore the azure
 robe of night
 And set the stars in more of poetry fancy, but it is an historical fact. Other republics had approached liberty, but there was no real liberty until the Republic of the West was born and the Star Spangled Banner was unfurled to the breezes and rose toward the skies, that liberty was caught up in humanity's embrace and embodied in a great and abiding nation.

"In America rights begin and go upward from the people. We have no Bourbon, no Hohenzollern, proclaiming that in his acts as sovereign that he is responsible to only his conscience and God. Ours is a government as proclaimed by Abraham Lincoln on that November day, in 1863, of the people, by the people and for the people.

"When the pistol shot rang out dealing death to an Austrian prince in 1914 it was a shot that resounded around the world. We played a role in a belated act, nevertheless an important one, in that great drama. The civilization of the west was at stake. Thousands of Elks rallied to the colors. Everywhere the nation's resources were taxed to win a great war for humanity's sake. The inclinations and results of that contest are well known to us all and need no special review at this time. But it is not inopportune to again call to mind the fact that two of the members of this lodge paid the supreme sacrifice on the fields of battle and in camp. All of the landmarks of the history of our country and its traditions are re-created in our beautiful flag. Our bi-monthly contact with the flag helps to keep fresh in our minds the sacrifices our forefathers and those which our brothers have made for it.

"The best and most practical way of honoring our departed brothers is by making their lives the standard for our own. Let us then seek to imitate them in their many virtues to practice in our daily intercourse with men, true Brotherhood Love, that love that prompts us to be ever ready to shield the weak and succor the needy. Let us make this good resolution today, and adhere to it with Fidelity. Let us bear in mind that we shall be judged by our works and not by our promises, and that an opportunity gone is an opportunity lost.

"The solemn proverb, speak to all, with meaning deep and vast,
 The mill will never grind again, with water that is past."
 "Let us then seek to control and direct the water as it rushes on to the mill of life. Let us ever be watchful that the wheel it turns spins but pure, sweet wheat and not the chaff. Let us assist our Brothers to direct the currents of their lives, among the rocks, through the rapids, and over the falls, so that in the end, all these currents of life may meet in that deep, calm, placid sea o'er which the sun of splendor rises, ne'er to set again.

"Let us so live our lives that when the Angel of Death comes to us of the cloud at night, delivers to us the summons to appear before the final judgment seat, we may be able in

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Copy for this Department furnished by County Agent

Corn Variety Tests.

There were eight plots of yellow corn planted at the R. E. Norris farm. The seed for three plots were selected from eight different farms. The highest yield was 73 bushel per acre, seed from Pollard brothers of Nehawka. Three of the plots were damaged by cyclone and their yield was very low. Mr. Norris's corn averaged 73 bushels. At the farm of H. J. Livingston seven plots of selected white corn was planted. The highest yield was 55 bushel per acre, seed from Guy Ward of Avoca. Livingston corn was next, 53 bushel.

These plots show that seed selected from farms in Cass county will yield good.

Girls Win at Chicago.

Marjory Joyce was second on a complete school girls wardrobe and Mary Ellen Whiles won second as style show girl. Charlotte Joyce was second high girl in judging clothing.

Are They Hungry?

Are the youngsters starving when they come home from school? This is because the noon lunch is not being satisfactory. Cold lunches never became a satisfactory meal for growing children. They need one dish of hot nourishing food, preferably made of vegetables or milk, to supplement their cold lunches. Fruit should also be a part of the noon lunch. The Agricultural College at Lincoln and its county extension agents have circulars which suggest hot school lunches and methods for serving them in a practical way.

Eating between meals is a habit which is very injurious to the best digestive systems. This is especially true if candy or cake is eaten because it takes the appetite away from other needed foods such as fruits and vegetables which contain minerals and vitamins.
