DEFENSE POLICY CHANGED

An outcry about military training has been going the rounds of the colleges and outcropping in the press. It seems that there are agitators who seriously object to the sort of military instruction offered in our universities. Lurid declamation are used to describe the alleged militaristic spirit which is resulting from this influence.

But there is no way of telling exactly what the people think about such a matter. Perhaps a poll of the people on the subject of national defense would prove immeasurably more valuable in the end than prohibition polling. It is probably unfortunate that national defense is a vague question, while that of wine and beer and bootleg rum has intimate acquaintance with the public mind and appetite.

The question of defense is considerably different today from what it was when the World War ended, or even what it was two years ago.

Europe has not shown the pacific idealism in which, until recently, had been credited to her by many Americans. Japan has not acted unseemingly but the Philippine demands for independence and the results which might ensue from granting that independence have had an effect on the American attitude toward eliminating non-preparedness. Other influences have been at work until today we no longer harbor the belief that war is forever banished, that the United States will never again rally to arms.

This being the case, public opinion should be alert to detect the moves of pacifists actively engaged in ripping away our defense machinery. We certainly do not want to develop a great war machine. That would be unnecessary and indefensible. But we do want to keep the young men of the country in good trim, physically and mentally. We do want to prevent a lapse into flabbiness. Criminal disregard of the fact that our homes and lives depend upon maintaining a rational attitude toward world affairs and perpetuating respect and willingness to sacrifice the flag.

DEMOCRATS SOUND TOCSIN

The tariff will be the chief issue in the next presidential campaign. Rep. William Oldfield of Ark., chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, declared in a national keynote speech before the Main Democratic state convention. He said his party will fight for downward revision of the rates "to a point where we will have a competitive-revenue tariff."

Among other issues he listed "the do-nothing attitude of the administration, the abuse by the president of his appointive power, and the complete domination of the administration by the ultra-rich and heavy campaign contributors to the Republican party."

He denied that the country is experiencing general prosperity or that the administration is practicing strictest economy. He charged that appropriations for the next fiscal year will be $155,000,000 more than those for the current year. "During the Harding-Coolidge regime," he said, "there have been more than 2,400 bank failures in five years while there were only 378 during the entire Wilson administration of eight years."

The League of Nations is surprised to learn that the United States government is cool towards the invitation to come to Geneva and talk over family matters. This is natural. The league is just learning we didn't join the family and Washington is just beginning to fear we did.

Little children want to get up early and parents have a hard time teaching them to lie in bed, and as they grow older they have a harder time making them get up.

THE SOB STUFF

A young woman, suing a man for $50,000 for breach of promise, began to weep softly in the courtroom of Judge Timothy D. Hurley, in Chicago, the other day. But the cry didn't last long. "I'm not going to have a crying spell going on in my courtroom," announced the judge. "You're crying your way into a verdict and I'll set it aside as soon as you get it."

The plaintiff promptly dried her eyes. Shutting the valve on sobs is a distinct aid to the mills of justice.

Personal letters from Nebraskans in congress indicate that the national lawmaking body is not expected to reach adjournment before the 1st of June. Even with sixty more days in which to labor it is practically certain that congress will quit with several important unfinished matters on its calendar.
