NOT FOR US

News from a certain Indiana town is that the board of education has put its official foot down hard against the employment of short-haired, short-skirted teachers.
Now a school board is certainly justified in maintaining a teaching staff that is of as high a standard as possible. We are quite sure that is the rule in Plattsmouth. Those who are to guide and instruct little children, or boys and girls in the grammar grades or in the high school, should be of a type to set a worthy example in conduct and character, as well as to teach efficiently "reading" and "rithmetic."
Yet it is extremely true that conduct and character alone will not enable one to lead the children or young folks in her charge. Personal attractiveness is a large factor. And one must not forget that the styles have slightly changed during the lifetime of school board members. The teacher whose dress was a standard when Mr. Brown or Mr. Jones was a barefoot boy trudging along to the little red school house of history, would be decidedly back number in the opinion of the lads of today, unless that teacher had been so wise as to study and follow the changing fashions.
With all due respect to those noble women teachers of a generation ago, we must confess that their style as we may imagine it would be very incongruous in the school room of today. Imagine attempting to instruct a class in calisthenics while the teacher's trail flopped about the floor or her shirtwaist and skirt seemed at the parting of the ways, or while her hairpins dropped noisily one by one or the old wire "rat" rattled ominously.
Calisthenics are only a small part of the school program, of course. Yet this is true—the thoroughly modern teacher who keeps herself well informed as to the latest methods of teaching will hardly be so far behind in other ways as to cling to antiquated styles. If she is utterly old fogey in dress one must suspect that her teaching is likewise reminiscent of the past.
It is essential of course that a teacher use discretion in her interpretation of the styles of today. As an extremist, she would be in good taste and hardly could set a desirable example. Yet, we have a persistent idea that the school teacher who is so thoroughly wide-awake to the time as to bob her hair—if that style is becoming to her—and to dispense with a reasonable amount of her long skirt will have a far easier time of it in properly guiding the young folks under her care.
Also, we have a sly conviction that were those staid school board members boys again in the class room, they would unanimously choose a teacher who wears the styles of 1926 rather than those of 1896.
Arthur Brisbane points out the secret of Mussolini's success. "To convince others, be yourself convinced." We don't see what chance a sensible man has in this world. Any fool can win the world to his foolishness if he believes in it firmly enough. It is natural, in a world where nobody is sure of anything for the man who is convinced to be a great leader. The first lesson of all those who give advice on how to be successful should be "be prejudiced, and conceded."
