"JUST ORDINARY MEN"

Dr. Frank Crane, in one of his interesting articles, expresses his surprise that the great men he has met do not commonly "look the part." In telling of several of these notables with whom he has come in contact, he points out that they do not have the appearance of being much out of the ordinary, and describes them, in appearance, as "common-place" and "just plain, ordinary men."

Perhaps there is more in this observation than a mere refutation of theories of physiognomy and phrenology. Perhaps more of these men than one might think are at bottom just "plain ordinary men." It is really remarkable how much an "ordinary" man can accomplish if he will devote to the full powers of his mind consistently and eternally to the task. One doesn't have to be a genius to be a real success and accomplish great things.

It is remarkable how so many great things have been accomplished and so many high places in life reached by just "ordinary men." They seem to have no special gifts—frequently they are not abundantly blessed with rare and brilliant ideas they have followed their stars, sometimes straining their eyes to catch the glimmering light, but plodding on unceasingly and using to the utmost what "inspiration" comes their way. And frequently they surprise even themselves.

The "ordinary man" has within him capacity in abundance to carry him to surprising heights. What does carry men to such heights is more often than not merely the desire and willingness to use what talents they have instead of letting them lie half-buried.

The Democrats have the best of it in congress and are meeting plaudits from the gold west. With peace and harmony throughout the land the Democrats certainly stand a better show than they ever did before, in coming to the front. Democracy is the people's friend and the voters are beginning to learn very rapidly that their only salvation is in the elevation of the grand old party to the head of the government.
