and was no match for the crafty scheming woman who was the real master of his household, his wife, Rebekah.

What a Family. What a family for a young man to grow up in, with the cross-grain of the relationship really existing therein, a child influenced by different forces whether persuasive or forceful. It is no wonder that there was disagreement between the two brothers, but the wonder is that they made as good men as they did.

This is the condition which sent Jacob away from home to the home of his brother, Jacob watchful, resourceful, and ever looking for an advantage. He first fell in love with his lovely cousin, Rachel. He watered her cattle and sheep for her then told her who he was, kissed her and wept afterwards because he was homesick, notwithstanding he was seventy years of age. A great big boy, and at the same time one of the shrewdest of men in a trade. He made an agreement with his uncle, Laban, to work for him for seven years for Rachel, as he wanted her for his wife. Laban was a shrewd trader as well as Jacob, and well did he work that young westerner for these seven years, still they seemed but a short time considering the great love which Jacob bore for Rachel.

The seven years were fulfilled and they brought a tragedy in his life. He had not thought of the practice of the east, that the elder daughter should marry before the younger, and while he knew and respected Leah, the elder, he was not in love with her, she was probably as good a girl, but not the lovable one that Rachel was. She was a different type, both as to disposition and in her personal characteristics, not so fair to look upon, and with sore eyes, which made her not so attractive.

All prepared for the celebration of the event, and the festivities over, and at night when it was dark, Rachel was taken away by a deceit of Leah, and Leah, the sore-eyed girl, was placed in his tent, she being privy to the scheme and pretending that she was the beloved Rachel, but the morning revealed that Jacob had a wife whom he had not thought he had married, and not the one which he had thought he was marrying. This was in return for the craftiness which he had used in cheating Esau out of his birthright and blessing. Jacob goes to Leah, and protests the deception, and is told in return that the custom is for the elder daughter to marry first, and also that he might have Rachel, but consummation of the wedding could not occur for a week. Then in the end he had two wives instead of one, and wives a plenty at that. Then he was given by Leah a hand maid for Leah, named Zilpah, and also given for Rachel a maid Billah, this making him four women even if not four wives.

He had to serve seven years more for Rachel, which made fourteen years in all, for the price of the wives. A new contract was made and during all the time prosperity was coming to Leah and Jacob was his servant. Many contracts were made, ten in all, and among them was one in which Jacob was to receive for his services the ringed, streaked, spotted and brown of the sheep, cattle and goats.

Here again we see the craftiness of Jacob, for he saw to it that in the breeding these kinds predominated, and in the end of the following years he was rich with more herds and cattle than his uncle and father-in-law, Leah. This with the complainings of the sons of Leah made Leah very sore and he was not friendly to Jacob. Now Jacob had been putting his cattle, sheep and goats away — three days' journey separating them from the flocks of Leah, and when conditions grew unbearable he called his wives, their children and hand maids, and the children born unto them, for they were now eleven sons, the eldest twelve years of age, and one daughter, together with many servants.

At this time after the consultation which was held in the field, the Lord called to Jacob in a vision and said, "Return to your old home in the west, back to Hebron and Beersheba, in Canaan. They prepared and immediately departed, and it was five days before Leah and the sons found out of the going of Jacob and his family, with their effects. He immediately prepared to follow with force and bring all back. It was also discovered that the idols of Leah were missing, and whoever had stolen them was to be made to suffer for it.

The Jehovah called to Laban saying, "See that you say nothing to Jacob, either good or bad, and do him no harm." Still the pursuit was made and when the company of Laban had overtaken the company of Jacob, they had a spirited talk over the matter, and finally Laban accused Jacob of stealing his Gods, idols, Jacob, feeling that they had not been taken, said that with whomsoever they might be found, let him die the death. Search was diligently made, and they were not found, although Rachel had hid them. Then they held a conference and swore fealty to each other and sat a stone up in Gilead, over which neither should pass to the harm of the other, and Laban returned to his place. Now the caravan moves on west, and another problem confronts the crafty Jacob, the meeting of his brother Esau. It was with great fear he proceeded. The grace of God and the twenty years' separation had changed the two men and their meeting was joyful, and lasted for the years which they lived.

Then followed two very important events, both mingled with sorrow, and one with joy as well. Rachel died in giving birth to their youngest son Benjamin and the father of Jacob and Esau, Isaac, died, both being buried at the burying place where Abraham had buried his wife Sarah, and where he himself was later buried. This likewise proved to be the burying place of Jacob when his bones were in later years brought from Egypt.

GUARD AGAINST FRICTION

In Pyramid-building days

The Great Pyramid of Cheops at Gizeh consisted of 2,300,000 blocks of stone averaging 40 cubic feet. 6,848,000 tons of stone were transported over many miles of road on vehicles with wooden wheels and wooden axles. With the crude methods of lubrication known to the Egyptians, this meant innumerable axles worn out by friction and wear.

The steel wheels, shafts and gears of modern motors are similar in only this respect—when lubrication fails they are quickly destroyed. Clean oil of high quality is your only protection.

Motor oils may look alike, but there is a big difference in the way they behave in a motor—in their resistance to heat, in their ability to maintain an unbroken cushion of oil in bearings and over all moving parts and protect against metal to metal contact and friction.

Polarine Oils are the highest quality motor oils that over a generation of experience and the most extensive manufacturing facilities have been able to produce. Use the right grade of Polarine for your motor and it will stay powerful and last a long time.

Make the Polarine Chart your lubrication guide. It is the result of innumerable laboratory and road service tests with all kinds of motors and all kinds of oil.

Keep plenty of oil in the crankcase. Drain it every 500 miles or as often as the manufacturer of your car recommends and refill with the grade of Polarine recommended for your car by the Polarine Chart. Polarine is made in six grades—Polarine Light, Medium, Heavy, Special Heavy, Extra Heavy and Polarine "F" for Fords. Buy Polarine where you buy Red Crown the Balanced Gasoline—where you see the Red Crown Pump and the Polarine Sign.
