Religion as an Aid to Members of Weaker Sex

Senator Ransdell of Louisiana Gives Credit to Catholic Church for Its Elevating Influence.

Chicago, June 23.—Women in Christendom owe their high position to the Christian religion, United States Senator Joseph E. Ransdell, of Louisiana, said in addressing the English speaking eucharistic congress of the Catholic church. The day was set apart as woman's day.

Even on the athletic field, the senator said, the Notre Dame university football squad, which in 1924 won the national championship, conquering every opponent, before each game had prayed for victory.

Wemen Equals of Husbands. "In Christian lands, women for centuries have been the equals, companions and helpmates of their husbands," said Senator Ransdell, after a brief resume of the history of women and informal divorce methods of pagan countries and in early Roman and Grecian history.

Foch a Religious Man. "The most remarkable soldier developed by the world war was Marshal Foch—the 'gray man of Christ'—who led the allied forces to victory," said Senator Ransdell. "On July 18, 1918, he consecrated the allied forces to the heart of Jesus, and that day marked the turning point in favor of the allies."

Feels the Call of Great Spirit; Ready to Go

Chief Plenty Coos, Picturesque Head of Crow Nation, Believes His Days on Earth Nearing End

Helena, Mont., June 22.—His sight dimming with passing years, Plenty Coos, picturesque and forceful chief of the Crow nation, has begun to contemplate the summons of the great spirit.

Seemingly stalwart despite his seventy-eight years, the nestor of Montana Indian leaders nevertheless believes that the time is approaching when the eagle feather must pass on to another.

Plenty Coos has acquired more than local fame. He it was who was chosen to represent the American Indians in the dedication ceremonies at the grave of the Unknown Soldier. He will make at least one more public appearance as head of the Crow nation at the semi-centennial observance of the battle of the Little Big Horn, June 24, 1926.

The Crow chieftain did not take part in this battle, which cost the lives of Custer and 212 of his immediate command, but his people, especially the River Crows, were in the thick of the fray. He then was a dashing young warrior, heading a party of twenty-eight Sioux and Cheyennes, attached to the command of General George Crook. At the battle of the Rosebud, in which Crook was defeated, Plenty Coos and other Crow scouts have been credited with saving the commander from the fate which befell Custer.

The life of Plenty Coos as a man of peace has been no less interesting than his record as a warrior. He was shown himself a leader in each phase. He was first of the Crows to take up farming, has been most successful in cattle raising and has proven himself a shrewd man of business.

HOLD FINE MEETING

Members of the Business and Professional Woman's club were "at home" last evening to twenty invited guests. The regular business session was omitted and as this was the closing meeting of the club year, the entire evening was given over to social diversions.

The president, Miss Marie E. Kaufmann, gave a resume of the week end at Camp Brewster, June 12 and 13 when the Plattsmouth, Wahoo, Fremont, Council Bluffs and Lincoln clubs were guests of the Omaha club. It was the consensus of opinion that the Omaha club members were royal entertainers and the Plattsmouth delegation will long remember their pleasant outing.

Next on the program was "A Reverie in Church" presented by "Widow Dooley," the village gossip, and an able corps of assistants. The costumes of Susan Smith, Mandy Tipps, Sally Snooks, Old Maids, the Preacher's wife, Fanny Flipup, Patty Pillsbury, the Tucker twins, Sexton and choir leader, will not soon be forgotten.

The club songs were entered into with much vim and after delicious refreshments contributed by Mesdames Wills, Pickard and Egenberger and Miss Gerda Peterson, various stunts were put on by all present and at a late hour the company dispersed.

It is hoped that with the opening of the next club year in September, many additional members will be forthcoming to help us in our efforts to make "Better business women for a better business world."

A Rocky Road Ahead for the Waterways Bill

Harmony Lacking in Promoting Missouri River Improvement and Cape Cod Purchase.

Washington, June 22.—A rocky road appeared today to be in the making for the house rivers and harbors bill, which drew nearer the senate floor with approval by the Missouri river improvement and Cape Cod canal purchase provision with modifications. Chairman Jones expressed hope that the committee would be able within two or three days to get the measure to the senate where it faces opposition to purchase of the canal, some dissatisfaction on the part of Missouri river interests because of the modifications made in the bill and bitter opposition from some senators from states along the great lakes to the Illinois river improvement approved yesterday.

Senator Howell, Nebraska, announcing that he would carry to the floor his fight against purchase of the canal for $11,500,000, said that the committee modification stipulating the United States should not be liable for interest on bonds of the operating company until the government has actual title to the property did not remove his objection.

The Missouri river project was modified to authorize appropriation of $12,000,000 for such improvement between Kansas City and Sioux City as would form integral parts of a comprehensive channel six feet deep, if it should be deemed advisable to provide such a canal in the future. Senator Williams, republican, Missouri, said the modification was not entirely satisfactory, altho "it was the best we could do in the committee."

Meanwhile great lakes opposition to the Illinois waterway was reiterated by Senator Willis, republican, Ohio, who said there seemed to be many "provisions in this bill, which should be examined closely." One project authorized he asserted, is based upon an engineer's report made eighteen years ago.

Eugene Mayfield Veteran Newspaper Worker

Veteran Editor in Charge of Sunday Department of World-Herald, 50 Years in the Game.

Omaha, June 21.—Eugene O. Mayfield, Omaha newspaperman, will round out a half century of service in the newspaper field this month. It is fifty years by actual count, but in his varied career as reporter and feature writer, Mr. Mayfield has really lived three average lives in one, running the gamut of countless thrills.

Life and work as a newspaperman has just been one excitement after another for this pioneer. He has been thrown in jail, he has become friends with many of the notorious characters of the old west, whose right hand flew to their holster with the least provocation, and he has risked his neck—just to get that story for which he was assigned. Mayfield truly is of the old school of "star" reporters who usually were assigned to political investigation work which required rare perspicacity.

One time there was a hot political campaign in Nebraska, with a high state office involved. Mayfield was given an assignment to go over into Iowa and dig up some of the history of one of the candidate's life, which apparently smacked of immorality. He went to the town, secured his information and had an affidavit made, supporting his story. Just as he was about to leave the town, the candidate's friends drove in town, learned of his investigation and gave chase—Mayfield running afoot with the affidavit clutched in his hand, and the pursuers in hot pursuit. The chase went on for several miles and Mayfield eluded them, went to a small town, woke up a drayage operator on a small railroad station and sent the affidavit. When he returned to the newspaper office, he was informed that another reporter had been assigned this task, but had been caught by the same men who had pursued him, and had been hanged to a tree until he was saved.

One time Mr. Mayfield was placed in a cell at Fremont, Nebraska, as a supposed horse thief, with a murderer from whom he obtained a full confession and a newspaper "scoop."

One of the best pieces of reporting done by Mr. Mayfield was that relative to the kidnaping of Eddie Cudahy, wealthy packer's son. Mayfield worked day and night on that story, and repeatedly "scooped" his opponent reporters, and even one of the world's greatest detective agencies.

In his long service, Mr. Mayfield says he has covered every assignment except society.

In his field as newspaper publisher, he established his first country newspaper at Louisville, the old "Observer," now "The Courier," in the year 1883. Successively, he started and owned the Greenwood, Nebraska, "Hawkeye," the South Omaha Times and others. On the South Omaha Times, he put out one of the unique papers of the west, buying a barrel of "funny" stock cuts. Without an artist, he would use the cuts and write a story, using local celebrities as subject for illustration. Many times, he related, he was engaged in serious rows in which a printer's mallet saved him from sound thrashings.

After one weekly paper and another, Mr. Mayfield joined the reporterial staff of the present Omaha World-Herald, just thirty-six years ago. His work on the "World-Herald," first as reporter and then as Sunday feature editor, took him to all parts of Nebraska, and today he is one of the best known newspapermen in the state. His vast store of knowledge today is used largely for reference purpose, and he is librarian for the World-Herald. He is 65 years old.

"But I would do it all over again," he said in retrospect. "I would like to be a good criminal lawyer or a good surgeon if I had it to do over again, but old printer's ink has spilled all over me, and I am afraid I'd jump back again and be a reporter."
