Omaha to be a stop in the new air route. Good!

Why not name that new Coolidge dance the "Hobby Horse Buck?"

The Missouri banker may soon be as notorious as the Missouri mule is famous.

That Dempsey-Willis-New York Boxing Commission row is also a moving picture—very moving!

Peggy Joyce has decided not to marry anyone at present, which certainly can be classed as news.

Wonder what became of the old-fashioned man who wore a cabbage leaf in his hat to keep his head cool.

Pennsylvania has her primaries, California has her earthquakes, and Missouri has had her State banks.

United States shies from break with Mexico and will keep hands off religious war, is Secretary Kellogg's answer to K. of C. protest.

Secretary Mellon says the war debt settlements are matters of the past. How "matters of the past" when collections are to run for 60 years into the future?

Sir Oliver Lodge is safe in predicting that wonderful advances will soon be made in science. But he would not be safe in asserting that our weather bureau prophets would ever be able to foretell the coming of a thunderstorm during a drought.

AIR TRAFFIC RELIABILITY

The official report showing that the air mail through Kansas City has operated with an efficiency of 97 per cent in the three months since it was established is evidence of the increasing dependability of air transportation. The record on this particular line seems to justify its move to carry passengers at an early date. Development of this branch of air traffic has awaited demonstrations that flying could be made reasonably safe and could maintain schedules comparable with those of other means of transportation. It is becoming more and more evident that the condition is being met and that a material expansion of air traffic of all kinds is not far away.

The transcontinental air mail line for several years has maintained a performance record of high efficiency. In the first six months after night flying was attempted, unusual and unforeseen difficulties were encountered. But at that, more than three-fourths of the flights were completed on schedule time, and after the period of experimentation had passed efficiency mounted close to 100 per cent. With limited exceptions, it has been held well above 90 per cent. The number of branches of air mail have been put into operation in recent months, but last year, before any of these was started, flying operations in the United States were more extensive than the average person would imagine. The Aircraft Yearbook for 1926, soon to be issued, contains reports from operators of planes in forty-one states. The nearly seven hundred planes used made more than 258,000 flights in the year and covered more than 5 1/4 million miles. They carried more than two hundred thousand passengers and 112 tons of freight and mail.

This operation largely was without supervision, either of pilots or planes. Much of it grew out of individual enterprise, and was without the aid of adequate capital and facilities. These are conditions that do not apply on the recent established air mail lines; and from many if not all of these may be expected records of efficiency similar to those made by the transcontinental and the southwest lines. Through operation of the division of civil aviation in the department of commerce there also is the promise of aid of various kinds that will promote the expansion, safety and reliability of commercial air traffic.—Kansas City Star.

SIGNALING IN MOTORING

Although it may be that the system of hand signals devised by the American Automobile Association is not all that it should be, the agitation for adoption should be encouraged, primarily because it represents a forward step toward uniformity. The continued growth of automobile traffic emphasizes the importance of hand signals that are uniform. The electric signals with which many cars are now factory equipped, and which operate on the brakes have helped somewhat to relieve the situation, but the hand in many instances continues the sole reliance of indicating the course of a moving automobile yet its employment is woefully deficient in information that may prevent accidents.

The hand is stuck out of the car to indicate a stop, to indicate a "back up," and not infrequently by a thoughtless driver to emphasize a remark to his companion. The American Automobile Association urges three simple hand signals: left turn, the arm horizontally extended; a right turn, the arm extended upward above horizontal; a stop, arm extended downward below horizontal. It is the contention of the association that if motorists generally would observe the signals as outlined, it would make for safety and contribute also to expedite traffic. Of course, there is no sure preventive for accidents, but if it were possible always to foretell what the other fellow is going to do it would unquestionably lessen the chances of many avoidable accidents.

FINANCE IN THE ADIRONDACKS

A dispatch from the Coolidge camp in the Adirondacks says that the president has "reduced the expenditures of the government to $3,270,000,000" by lopping $100,000,000 off the budget estimate for 1928. A little farther on we read that the $3,270,000,000 represents an increase of $55,000,000 over the appropriations for the current year.

All that's a good deal as if a man said he had reduced his expenditures by persuading his wife to pay only $38.99 for a hat, instead of $40, to replace a hat that cost $37.

Some men frankly own up when they've been stung by a bad investment, while others moan that the country's going to the dogs.

THE SADDEST FOLLY

We are inclined to believe a man may make too great a sacrifice to show his devotion to his wife. This New Jersey man, whose wife is suing him for divorce, makes a point in his defence that he had his bow legs straightened to please his better half. He seemed to think this hardship should have won undying affection for him.

Not so. At least, not necessarily so. There may be strength or weakness in concessions to a wife's whims. It all depends. In this case there had been no deception. A man cannot successfully cover the bows in his legs. Neither can a woman any more, for that matter. Therefore, having married Harris with full knowledge of his physical defects she would have respected him more if he had stood pat—that is, as pat as his bow legs would have permitted. Even if she had dared him to have his legs broken she would have hoped he would not be such a fool. Having been fool enough to try to please her in this manner, she probably never quite forgave him for his folly. She would have preferred him bowed and strong rather than straight and weak. That is, if we understand feminine psychology—which we do not.

The point is that it is folly to try to achieve perfection to please the women, especially if Nature has interposed abnormal obstacles. Women know there isn't any such thing. They may rail a bit at his imperfections, but they do not expect him to break his back because he is round, shouldered, or even his legs because they are bowed.

THE LAZY CHILD

Many parents will be glad to learn that a convention of school teachers has declared the chief vice of the modern high school pupils is laziness. There is satisfaction in knowing that the disposition of one's child to avoid work is merely a normal tendency and not an indication he will be utterly worthless when he does grow up. Many of us have been uneasy about our children because of their failure to turn a hand to assist in anything about the premises. We have feared they were more trifling than the average because of their aversion to handling the lawn mower, the rake and the spade.

But if most school children are lazy, maybe it is the natural thing to expect of a child. We are positively cheered by this information the teachers have given us.

A plot to beat the government out of $150,000 was discovered among prisoners in Leavenworth Federal Prisoners in Leavenworth, Kansas, yet up to now there has been no popular demand to turn the rascals out.

Silos to Hold Winter Feed

Pit and trench silos are being dug by many farmers in the dry section of the state to take care of the emergency in their feed problem. The agricultural college at Lincoln and its county extension agents are helping with plans and suggestions about building silos.

Ensile made of corn with few ears on it is practically as good feed for stock cattle as heavily eared corn, according to tests made at the agricultural college and by other cattlemen. While the immature corn being put into the silo by the farmers of these sections will not be as good feed as it were more mature, it will still be worth cutting for winter feed this year when alfalfa hay or linseed oil meal may be available as a protein feed to use with this ensilage. A pound of cottonseed meal per day will supplement the ensilage and carry stock cattle thru the winter in good shape.

Nebraska's Greatest Exhibit

The agricultural extension building at the state fair is just naturally going to spill over on all sides this year. The boys and girls will be there with almost 500 baby beeves and dairy calves, about 350 pigs, and more chickens, corn, dresses, jars of fruit, loaves of bread and boys and girls themselves than have ever come together in competition in Nebraska before. The calves will go to the Coliseum to show, the hog show ring will be set up outside in a tent. Several extension exhibits, formerly put up in booths, will be set up outside, and a flock of hens will be housed during the fair under good practical conditions which can be copied on any farm. Hog lot sanitation will be championed by a Clay county farmer who has raised a litter of 14 pigs to weigh more than a ton this year. He will bring in the pigs, show the type of movable equipment he them in and be there himself to tell how he did it and what he thinks of clean ground and clean equipment for hogs.

Show Poultry at Fairs

The poultry raiser who goes home from his county fair or the state fair saying that he had "better ones than that" in his flock at home is not a good poultryman, in the opinion of those public spirited people of Nebraska who boost for county and state fairs and other competition that builds up the standards and aims toward perfection of the various breeds of poultry. That poultry raiser should take a few of his "good ones" to the fairs. Any poultry raiser can learn by showing birds. He should first acquaint himself with the standards of his breed and also the disqualifications. Often times he may save the entry fee and the cost of taking a bird to the show and home again if he can see a disqualification. Grooming the feathers, legs and feet will help the appearance of the fowl. Washing white birds will make them whiter. Lincoln and its county extension agents can furnish more information about exhibiting poultry and fitting it for competition.

SLUGGERS WIN BATTLE

From Monday's Daily—Yesterday afternoon the local Bohemian Sluggers added to their string of victories when they administered defeat to the team that represented the Weeping Water baseball enthusiasts and as the Weeping Water people enjoy their Sunday sports at Manley the game was staged in the latter place and attended by quite a large number of the fans. The result of the game when the last out was checked up was 14 to 7 in favor of the locals and was a game replete with a great deal of hitting on the part of the locals. In the hitting department George Sedlacek featured for the Sluggers with a triple, a double and two singles. King and Lewis Svoboda also were able to snag several hits out of their journey to the plate.

Louis Svoboda and Frank Gradoville did the hurling for the Sluggers and Gradoville especially was effective against their opponents.

TWO CROPS A YEAR IN FLORIDALE

A 300-DAY growing season on the sun-kissed uplands of Floridale, in West Florida, allows of two crops of many products from the same land.

AN even climate cooled by Gulf breezes, year around pasturage and pure water are ideal conditions for the development of a new dairy center of the country and for the commercial production of poultry on a large scale. Fruits and berries, too, are profitable crops. Farmers here are happy and prosperous.

THIS development is not a part of the Florida speculation boom. Learn the facts from farmers who have come from many Middle Western states.
