A TALE OF TWO NATIONS

Mr. Wilson thought our chief fault as self-governing people is that we do not know history. Mr. Wells ascribes to this omission many of the woes of the world. History is a mirror in which, if we will, we can see ourselves. It is not only true that it repeats itself, but it does so at our cost.

They are as a rule derided who try to warn the United States against a too highly-centralized government. To lift a hand against the rush for federal authority to do what state authority fails to do is to invite the abuse of those whose thoughtlessness would destroy the precious possession of local government and hand the republic over to the bureaucrats.

Yet those protestants are borne out by history. The experience of the world, of which they are mindful, plainly indicates the consequences of such a course as we are pursuing. Here is what the historian Stobart says about Rome at the beginning of the fourth century:

The whole Roman world was being strangled with good intentions. The bureaucracy had grown so highly organized and efficient, so nicely ordered thru its various grades of official life, that everybody walked in leading strings to the music of official proclamations. Paternalism regulated everything with its watchful and benignant eye. The triumph of the system may be seen in the famous Edict of Princes issued by Diocletian in 301. Here we find scheduled a maximum price for every possible commodity of trade and a maximum wage for every kind of service. Death is the penalty for any trader who asks or any purchaser who pays a higher price. No difference of locality or season is permitted. Trade is forbidden to fluctuate under penalty of death. This delightful scheme, which was engraved upon stone in every market in Europe, was evidently the product of a highly efficient Board of Trade, which had sat late of nights over the study of statistics and political economy. Benevolent officials of this type swarmed all over the empire, spying and reporting on one another as well as on the general public.

Is there no warning in this? Do those who would ignore the experience of humankind ever read history? Do they see any likenes in ourselves and our time to those other people and their time? Are we not being slowly strangled by those same good intentions which strangled an even greater nation than our own? Let the people who want the federal government to say what we shall eat and drink, at what age we shall work, how we shall be born, ad libitum, ad nauseum—let them answer.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A POLITICAL MYSTERY

Who have some very astute politicians. They understand national politics and they understand the politics of the individual states. If some particular section of the country develops new and previously unheard of political symptoms, these experts devote a little time to intensive study, after which they understand that section's politics, too.

But when it comes to recent Iowa politics, they laid right down and gave up. Iowa politics of today are a bit too peculiar for mortal mind to comprehend.

Normally, Iowa is strongly Republican. Therefore, when Senator William S. Kenyon resigned in 1922, it wasn't surprising that his state elected another Republican—Smith W. Brookhart—to fill out the unfinished term.

A Republican! Brookhart? About as much so as Trotsky, "regular" Republicans say. From which it would appear that Iowa Republicans must be of a violently insurgent brand.

But wait. Having served out his fractional term, Brookhart ran for the senate again. He lost. There was some argument about it, but the senate, investigating, decided in favor of Dan F. Steck, Democrat.

Republican Iowa, it appeared, was so far from radical that it preferred an ultra-conservative Democrat-Steck to a radical Republican, of the Brookhart type. That was in 1924.

This year it seemed a fair conclusign that conservatively Republican Iowa would renominate the conservatively Republican Albert E. Cummins for the senate seat he had occupied so long and creditably. Not so, however, Brookhart won the Republican nomination, hands down.

Then Cummins died. So that leaves an additional Iowa senate seat to be filled, between the first of next December and the first of the ensuing March. Brookhart, being already a candidate for the long term, announced himself as a candidate for the short one, too, so as to come back to Washington a session sooner than he would, had Cummins lived.

Iowa Republicans had just nominated him for the long term. Wasn't it reasonable to conclude that it would nominate him again, for the short one?

Oh, no! It nominated David W. Stewart, conservative of conservatives among Republicans. Conservatism was turned down for radicalism in 1922. Radicalism was turned down for conservatism in 1924. Conservatism was turned down for radicalism in June 1926. Radicalism was turned down for conservatism in August of the same year. All in the same state.

How can any politician make heads or tails out of that?
