INTELLECT AND MORALS

Dr. Henry Suzzalo, recently deposited president of the University of Washington, told the school teachers of Oregon in a public address that the school as an institution is "pre-eminently devised to deal with intellectual things." This is true, so far as it goes; and yet its very truth carries a necessary implication that the school cannot stop with the merely intellectual and leave the moral side of human nature out of consideration.

Intellectual power for its own sake is a quality for the development of which in his own person anyone may well strive. When the taxpayers are asked, however, to support an enormously expensive public school system in order to develop intellectual power in the youth of each generation as it comes, they do not pay the tax simply to furnish these young people with intellectual power for their own enjoyment. The school is an institution from which society expects to get back substantial dividends, for the good of all. And if over the public becomes convinced that the dividends are not coming in, the willingness to pay taxes for the support of free public schools will pass away.

Now mere intellectual accomplishment without sound moral backing is not, as a rule, of any considerable profit to society. In only too many cases it is distinctly unprofitable, and often harmful. Under such circumstances, the public schools—which for this discussion, means the executives and teachers—are under a clearly implied obligation to look after the morals of the boys and girls assigned to their care. Otherwise they are building up an intellectual power with no assurance that it will contribute to the genuine upbuilding of the public which is footing the bills.

The schools cannot throw off this responsibility on the ground that the homes and the churches are the agencies to which all moral training logically belongs. With no small element of the youth of any generation, the home itself is too often morally defective, and careless of its duty. Schoolboards and superintendents cannot change the homes of the pupils in their schools; they can insist that teachers shall not be employed who do not set a good moral example and who are not willing and anxious to give sound moral instruction where it is needed.

We are not much concerned that the moral teaching in the schools should constitute a formal part of the curriculum. Vastly more important is the influence of a teacher whose character and personality are such that boys and girls will instinctively look upon him, or her, as a good moral example to follow. The upward pull of such an influence in a child's life is of vastly greater effect than formal instruction; and it need hardly be argued that this upward pull, where it exists will operate to the intellectual advancement of the pupil no less than to his moral betterment. The success of the public schools in their intellectual work depends very largely on the moral tone of the teaching force.

NEWS FOR THE GIRLS

Just between ourselves, girls, you must be careful with our cigarettes. That is, if you expect to enjoy cigarettes and also wear silk stockings. You may not know it, but the cigarette is one of the deadliest foes of the silk stocking.

Often that runner in your hosiery that provokes you almost to hysteria is caused by a cigarette spark. It can even be caused by hot ashes from the tip end of a cigarette.

Now, as you all know, when a silk stocking starts to run, it can certainly upset a pleasant day, so be careful with your cigarettes. Learn to flip the ashes just as far from your twinkling tooties as you possibly can, and thus obviate some of the danger.

However, to cheer you up a bit, here's some good news. The stockings couldn't possibly be a pair, but you know what we mean. The extra stocking will be a sort of spare tire to carry along in case of accident. They'll cost more, of course, but it won't be quite so expensive as buying a new pair of stockings. Won't it be fine when you can carry a spare, just like a motorist.

Dr. Nicholas Murray tells the country that the president will not be a candidate for another term, but the country is probably in a mood to wait and see what the president has to say on the subject.

A Georgia farmer had a lot of cotton and a lot of sweet potatoes. He got 12 cents for his cotton and $1.60 for his sweet potatoes. He blames the government for the low price of cotton and thanks the Lord for the high price of yams.

AND THIS IS FAME

Most of 'em want the jobs for the salary attached, but a few of them are seeking fame.

It isn't worth while boys—it positively isn't worth while.

Fame is the most unsubstantial things in the world. It really is not worth chasing.

Take, for instance, the alleged fame of our greatest men and see what the modern historians are doing to them. A thumb nail sketch of some of the supposedly great, reads about like this:

Benjamin Franklin: Father of a son who must have had a mother, but nobody knows her name.

George Washington: Cussed, outrageously fond of women. Ran a distillery.

Thomas Jefferson: Agnostic, always drank wine with his meals.

Alexander Hamilton: Excessively fond of female society.

Henry Clay: Best poker player in Washington. Always held openers. Preferred Scotch.

Daniel Webster: Drank "Likker." Wouldn't pay his debts.

Abraham Lincoln: Uncouth. Family not prominent socially. A bar sinister in his ancestry.

U. S. Grant: Often got drunk, even while president. Mighty poor horse trader.

Woodrow Wilson: Should have taken Henry Cabot Lodge to Paris.

William E. Gladstone: Accused of a fondness for Lily Laundry.

Jesus of Nazareth: Radical. Wine bibber. Associated with publicans and sinners. Seen in company of a wanton woman.

And so it goes. Looking for fame is equivalent to hunting for trouble. It makes people say naughty things about you even after you are dead.
