THAT MISDIRECTED MAIL

A postal item says it costs the Philadelphia postoffice around $30,000 a year to look after misdirected mail matters. If that extra expense is noted in other large cities, the drain on postoffice receipts must be very large. Then must be considered the many smaller cities, as well as towns, and the aggregate must reach several millions, all through the carelessness and indifference of the people. This rank carelessness in addressing mail matter is by no means confined to private citizens, for business firms are by no means as careful as they might and should be. The government is good to be at such pains to correct mistakes of users of the mails, and the additional expense is an item that some day may be considered. But many letters and mail parcels have really blind addresses, with such as cannot be delivered sent to the dead letter office where experienced clerks try it all over again.

This peculiar division of the postal service is located in Washington and is another factor in making up the millions appropriated every year to operate the postoffice department. In these so-called dead letters are quite often found articles of value and when possible they are returned to the senders. These articles often comprise currency, drafts, checks, jewelry and toilet articles and the loss is not the fault of the mails, but of carelessness, more or less stupidity and forgetfulness.

The Mandan, N. D., Pioneer Press comments as follows on this subject: "As a tribute to the resourcefulness and skill of those clerks it is boasted that only one in a million letters mailed is ultimately lost."

"One question whether the letters so saved from the oblivion of the dead letter office are worth anywhere near $20,000 multiplied by the number of large postoffices doing such rescue work. Really important mail is likely to be carefully addressed. At least, we hope it is."

"It is almost awesome to contemplate the trustfulness and carelessness of the mail-sending public. In spite of plainly given and oft-repeated instructions about addressing correctly and clearly, about putting return addresses on mail, and about giving the local postoffice your own change of address when you move, a surprisingly large section of the public goes right ahead ignoring all the rules and calmly trusting to Uncle Sam to make up for its deficiencies."

"Perhaps if the various postoffices didn't do such a good job retrieving otherwise lost mail, the public would wake up and assume more of its own responsibility."

LONDON FOG AND DR. BUTLER

A cable from London quotes Nicholas Butler as in a pessimistic mood over the world's present poverty in men of genius, and as convinced that the World War, which should, by all traditions, have developed some colossal figure, produced nothing of the sort. Perhaps Dr. Butler has been depressed by the heavy rains in England, and again he may be wrong. No word is more abused in the using than "genius." The specimen is not so commonplace as most men think. And yet many think that Edison is something of a genius, that men of genius are at work in laboratories, and some think that one may be found on Wall street.

But is it true that no colossal figure was produced by the World War? Lenin will not qualify in the opinion of many who hate his philosophy, and yet he destroyed an ancient society in a mighty empire and established something different which has thus far, for 10 years, withstood the attacks of the world. Genius or not, history cannot dismiss him from consideration. Some will insist that Mussolini qualifies. Neither is admirable to real Americans, but neither was Napoleon, who was the colossal figure that emerged from the wars of more than a century ago.

The little Franco-Prussian War produced a genius in Bismark, but he changed Germany not nearly so radically as Lenin has changed Russia, and no more than Mussolini has changed Italy.

And time alone will fix the status of Woodrow Wilson, who gave the world the most inspiring message and ideals in centuries.

Dr. Butler may shed his pessimism when he escapes the London rains and fogs.

UNCLE SAM'S TIRELESS HAND

An illuminating illustration of the inexorable hand of justice when manifested by the national government is that of the final capture of the three men who, several years ago, robbed a mail train and killed three of the train crew in the coldest blooded manner imaginable.

For months not the slightest clew could be obtained, but the agents of the department of justice continued their tireless search; if it had been any other branch of service of city or state government, it is ten to one that the effort would have been abandoned after the first few months.

But it is not for nothing that the federal officers have won a great reputation for clinging to the trail until they get their man; it has always been said that offenders against the law need not fear a whole lot if they only have the ordinary means of pursuit to fear, but that if the Bloodhounds of the secret service are ever let loose, the end is always the same.

So the hunt went on, month after month; clews were obtained in various parts of the United States, in Canada and even in the army service in the Philippines. But each one, when run down, proved to be founded only on suspicion. But a few days ago came the end when the last two of the three brothers were taken into custody, confessed and sentenced to life imprisonment.

An interesting phase of the confession obtained from one of the men was that he had never been able to get away from the ringing of the locomotive bell as one of the train crew was shot. Thus conscience keeps up its steady goad in the mind of the man who commits murder.

QUOTAS AND SERVANTS

Tormented by the servant problem, some well intentioned ladies have lately been urging an amendment to the immigration law so as to let down the bars to permit the entry of more domestic servants. But is that where the chief trouble lies? Not in the view of the department of labor. According to its bureau of labor statistics, the real difficulty seems to be that both native and foreign-born prefer other ways of making a living.

To anyone who has studied the statistics that conclusion is inevitable. Despite the steady stream of immigrant domestic workers during the decade before 1920, the total number of foreign-born domestic servants in this country kept dwindling. The regular bours and larger freedom offered by industry made as strong an appeal to them as it did to the native-born.

Another thing that casts doubt on the blameworthiness of the immigration law is the fact that "there has been no important decrease in the immigration of alien females belonging to the races from which domestic servants have been chiefly drawn."

Playing golf may help if you're in bad shape, but it doesn't seem to improve the shape of your legs.

200 Spring Fry Stolen Tuesday

Loss Discovered Wednesday Night;—Are Taken from the Farm of William James.

Chicken thieves who operated in Otoe county Tuesday night were no respecters of persons because they stole nearly 200 spring fry from the farm of William James, about nine miles northwest of Nebraska City. Mr. James is president of the Otoe County Anti-Chicken Stealing association. The loss was not learned until late Wednesday evening when Mrs. James upon going to a brooder house found that instead of finding a crowded brooder, it was less than half filled. She told her husband of the theft and he in turn came to the city and notified Sheriff Carl Ryder.

The James family raised a large flock of chickens this season, probably 800. The older ones were kept in three large chicken houses on the place while the fry were kept in the brooder in a small shed at one end of the brooder is kept open and the chickens are out in the yard by the time the family arises of a morning but it is a custom of Mrs. James to see that they are in the brooder each evening. These chickens averaged about three pounds each and were of the White and Buff Orpington breeds. Chickens in the other houses were not molested by the thieves which gives rise to the belief of Mr. James that the thieves were familiar with the premises. The larger chicken houses are at a greater distance from the brooder than the smaller one but it was evidently young chickens that the thieves were after, Mr. James says.

Sheriff Ryder immediately telephoned to poultry dealers in the section of the county to be on the lookout for the chickens but up to a late hour Thursday had not found a trace of them.

Mr. James is a member of the Nebraska Farmer association which offers a $50 reward for the capture and conviction of each chicken thief and he offers a similar reward for the apprehension and conviction. He told the sheriff that his family had never felt uneasy about the brooder was much nearer the house than the others. The family had heard no unusual sounds about the place.—Nebraska City News-Press.

BOEDEKER FAMILY ARE TRANSFERRED TO OMAHA

F. A. Boedecker and family who recently went to Minneapolis to make their home and where Mr. Boedecker was the general manager for the Michael Oil company will make their home in Omaha in the future. Mr. Boedecker has secured a much better position with the oil company in Omaha which accounts for the change being made.

They have shipped their household effects from Minneapolis and will be at home in Omaha just as soon as a suitable home can be secured.

Mr. Boedecker and family came to Nebraska Wednesday evening for a short visit with relatives here while their goods were en route to Omaha and until a house could be found.

Mr. Boedecker's father, Ad. Boedecker, who arrived in Minneapolis Sunday morning for a visit with them made the return trip home with his son and family. He did not know they were going to leave Minneapolis until he arrived there.—Nehawka Enterprise.

Sometimes, we feel pessimistic, and then again, we reflect that, despite the best efforts of parole boards, fails are not as yet equipped with revolving doors.
