Teach the Child the Value of Real Ideals

Mrs. Anna M. Newell, Chairman of Child Welfare Department Writes of the Child.

Two things in life are permanent. Most of that which catches and holds the imagination and interest of the mob is transitory. Yet the development and general acceptance of that which is enduring, determines not only the degree but the permanence of a civilization. For civilization is not wealth, nor education, nor outward show of refinement and culture, these are but the tools of civilization. Its real structure consists of the ability to visualize and implant in life the highest qualities of the human soul.

The purpose of this article is not to decry present conditions or deprecate American civilization, but if possible, to point the way to better and more lasting development. Better homes are not dependent upon greater wealth. Home is not made of its material surroundings. It is composed of that intangible something which we call "spirit" or "atmosphere." Since this is but the composite of the various persons in the home, it naturally follows that the betterment of the home must come through instilling into the mind and life of the individual those ideals which make for higher standards of character.

The question, then, which presents itself to us is: "How may we better instill into the life of the individual higher ideals, nobler motives, and a greater regard for the responsibilities of life itself." In other words, how shall we give a nobler conception of life and its meaning?

It is evident that these ideals must come from some source outside the home and must be promulgated in a systematic manner. No institution in America has had a more general effect upon its citizenry than the public school. If the child, at the most impressionable age, were taught the sacredness of life, of its obligations, of its duties; if he were taught that no retting of wealth, but the manner in which it is accumulated is important; that not the possession of things but the development of character is life's ultimate goal, would it not react in a better home, and a better civilization?

The church has been, and is, a potent factor in the moral development of the child. The daily Bible school, the Vacation Bible school, the supervised play ground, the multitude of organizations, such as the Boy Scouts, the Girl Reserves and others are but an attempt on the part of the church and community to teach the coming generation something of real worth in regard to life and its responsibilities.

The child must be taught the sacredness of motherhood, and the home; that wealth and education are but tools in the hand of the individual; tools which bring multiplied responsibilities with their added power. In short, in a multitude of ways, we must teach that real character and its proper development is the ultimate aim and goal of life. Then

PAROLE BREAK TO BE RETURNED FROM PRISON

State Finger Print Officer Walter Schroeder is trying to kill two birds with one stone by making a trip to Memphis, Tenn., to attend the International Identification association convention during the first week of September, fit in with one to McAllister, Okla., to bring back a Nebraska parole violator, whose term in the Oklahoma prison will be out September 11.

If the authorities in Oklahoma will agree to turn the man over a few days beforehand, Schroeder will take in the convention and return home via McAllister. On account of special round trip rates to Memphis, he could do this at less outlay for railroad fare than if he made the journey from Lincoln direct to McAllister and back. The convention will end September 4, a week prior to the date when the sentence expires.

The prisoner is to be returned to this state is Joe Bates, sentenced from Saunders county to serve 5 years for horse theft. He got his sentence on Christmas day in 1923 and was paroled on Lincoln's birthday, February 12, in 1926.

BOXER WINS AND LOSES

Rufus Miles, claiming Columbus, Ga., as his home town, knocked out Jack Hayes, Council Bluffs welterweight, in the first round of a scheduled six-round bout in one of the main events at the Broadway Athletic club in the Bluffs Monday night. Miles' stopping of Hayes so shortened the card that the promoters decided to bring out another opponent for him. Miles consented to a second bout, so Sam Disalzo of Omaha, who weighed 12 pounds more than Miles, hustled into fighting togs, stepped into the ring and proceeded to win the decision over the southerner in six stanzas.

Jimmy Harrell, Omaha bantam, beat Clay Shaddon in a four-round bout, Pete Olson and Wayne Crocker went to a draw in three and Jim Greco and Fred Kallio were on even terms at the end of three rounds. The Poland twins' three-rounder was likewise a draw.
