The eighth annual meeting of the general assembly of the league covenant is now in session at Geneva. There are 48 nations represented. Alberto Guani of Uruguay, was chosen permanent president. This is the third time Latin-America has been favored. Some weighty questions are up for treatment.

NEW HOPE FOR WORLD PEACE

The statements of Foreign Minister Stresemann of Germany, and Foreign Minister Briand of France, last week in which they both spoke so unreservedly for world peace, is about the most welcoming news that has come from Europe in a long, long time.

Stresemann's declaration that Germany would be more than pleased to sign the compulsory arbitration clause of the world court of justice, is an unflinching sign that he speaks for the German nation, and that he realizes the future greatness of his country lies in the paths of peace.

Briand was quick to extend the welcome hand to this frank statement, and with these two statesmen speaking for their respective nations, it is hard to conceive that any warlike elements can possibly cause a step backward.

It is assertions like the foregoing which will cause Americans to have faith in the league of nations; heretofore the great powers have spent most of the time at the gatherings jockeying for coveted positions, making evasive statements, and leaving the whole situation just about as complex as it was before.

We in this country have not had the greatest amount of faith in representation in the league, believing that the European nations were really not sincere in a desire to end war; we have wished to believe, but in the light of the past, and what has gone on since the end of the world war, our hope and faith has suffered more than one shock.

The United States will be more than glad to take any declarations for peace at their face value, because this is the first time that unequivocal utterances have been made by the men who have had the unquestioned authority to place their countries on record. Now a similar statement from Mussolini will help a great deal. We believe Great Britain will be more than ready to fall in line.

HEALTHY 1927

However much "grouching" may have been done over the quaint weather vagaries which have marked 1927, especially the summer months, we are now told that so far this year has been an exceptionally healthy one.

Statistics prepared by prominent insurance companies show that fewer people among the policy holders have died during the first half of 1927 than in any previous year. The white death rate for this period was 8.6, compared with 8.7. Mortality from influenza and pneumonia has also been lower. Typhoid and diphtheria death rates have risen, though no marked increase in either is shown as a result of conditions growing out of the Mississippi flood. Measles, scarlet fever, and whooping cough have caused fewer fatalities, though the cancer record is unaltered. This is all interesting, encouraging news, since it indicates excellent general conditions throughout the United States. Constant education in matter of hygiene and sanitation, along with the increasing advance of medical science, has almost completely wiped out of our civilization the plagues which devastated cities and villages in olden times. Likely, by careful living and preventive measures we are building up greater individual resistance to disease.

RESTLESS ROOSEVELTS

Not satisfied because the Roosevelt name is linked with the search for rare ovis poli, Colonel Kermit Roosevelt is now planning to accompany Frank Kingdon Ward, explorer and naturalist, into Assam on the hunt for rare flora. A syndicate of garden lovers desiring new hardy plants is backing the expedition, which will also collect specimens for Kew Gardens and the Edinburgh natural history museum. A blue poppy is one of the flowers for which the explorers will look. The party intends to set out in November and will not return until 1929. It seems that while much of the late Theodore Roosevelt's political instinct was inherited only by his daughter, Alice Roosevelt, his love for adventure has descended to his sons, Kermit and Theodore. Without doubt it is just as well for these members of his family to try to make names for themselves in such fields of endeavor, rather than attempt to imitate their father's success in matters of government.

The prediction is made that out of the discussion at Geneva in the present assembly will come something definite as to disarmament. Sometimes talk eventuates.

A SHOWER BATH FOR CAL

A modern shower bath equipment, equal in cost to the best that can be found in the home of any millionaire, has been installed in the remodeled White House.

Prior to this installation, President Coolidge had to use an antiquated hose hooked up to a hydrant when he wanted to take a shower bath.

Remembering that our President was born and bred in Vermont, it is easy to assume that he wasn't reared to need a shower bath in winter time. But he will have two autumn months before cold weather sets in at Washington, and certainly he will enjoy his vertical bathery.

In many modern hotels you can get a room with tub bath for $4 a day and up, or a shower for $3.50 and up. This clearly discloses the tavern keeper's idea of the relative value of tubs and showers. He puts a premium on the tub. Just why is this? Will some kindly hotelier make himself the medium of this information? To the uninitiated eye a shower bath seems preferable to a closing ablution. It is quicker, and obviously more cleansing, if obviousness may be mentioned in connection with a bathroom. Then why charge more for a downpour?

As for the White House and its lavatory equipment, that noble and desirable edifice was erected before baths were in general use. George Washington used to swim the Potomac, Thomas Jefferson probably considered daily bathing undemocratic, and Andrew Jackson very likely preferred the brimming horse trough at the stable to any contrivances lugged into the mansion itself. The British were for a generation the foremost bathers. They began it over a hundred years ago, and for a century they boasted of their tubs, which were filled every morning by strong-armed maids who toted the water in buckets to the master's room. Yankee ingenuity began installing piped bathbaths about 1850, and the bathing industry has now come to be one of the biggest things there is.

WILLIAM THE PROPHET

"Jealousy between nations is steadily growing," the ex-kaiser is quoted by a Danish newspaper as saying. Hence the exiled former monarch looks for another war in about ten years. Sad to relate, the appearance of things supports the ex-kaiser's pretensions to prophesy. There is more internal ill will now than at any time since immediately after the close of the last world war, ten years ago. The ex-kaiser has been making progress. He sees now that "jealousy between nations" is a sure-spouting seed of war. The sprouts are visible now.

But to the kaiser's reported wish to recover his throne "to teach the world how to insure permanent peace," the world will be cold as ice. The kaiser was among those who taught the world brilliantly how not to insure peace. If we used our heads, we would save ourselves by means of that lesson, taking no further chances on the kaiser.

As to putting the Hohenzollern back on the throne to give him a chance to show how wrong he was before, the risk is prohibitive. It would be worse than marrying a man to reform him.

A DIRECTORATE FOR CHINA

An event potentially of great importance passed with little notice in the Occident when in Nanking the old "southern capital" of China, the two Nationalist governments that have lately been housed in Nanking and Hankow were united in a single organization. The form of the new government is a controlling commission of five members, with the usual executive departments. This is not a type of authority conducting to energy or celerity of action, but China is a nation that refuses to be rushed. Perhaps it will be just as well if no Napoleon merges out of this directorate.

Nor does the fate of the new government rest upon China alone. It will considerably depend upon the action of the outside world. For almost at once the commission will need money. This it may seek to obtain by using the salt tax, already pledged to dubious debts or by levying a super tariff, which is contrary to treaty. Nobody will emit a louder howl against either course of action than some American traders who would protest to their last breath the sovereign right of the United States to frame its own method of taxation.

Complaint is made that the 20-year-old English girl who recently won the chess championship is not getting the publicity due her. Her mistake was in not playing the matches in a bathing suit.

Camel
 Climbing to new heights of popularity

Government figures show that more Camels are being smoked today than ever before. One after another Camels passed them all.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.
