HOW IMMIGRATION IS WORKING

It appears that the immigration stream is not as steady as supposed, and that the northern European countries are apt to be irregular. Thus in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, Norway fell short of filling her quota by several hundred, Sweden lagged behind by a thousand or so, Denmark was shy 200, the Irish Free State put her allowance over 4,000, Great Britain and North Ireland were content with sending nearly 5,000 less, while Germany was satisfied with around 800 less of her people. In June 30, all the above named countries opened up more and easily supplied Uncle Sam with all to whom he had sent invitations to become his permanent guest, supplying themselves as best they could from the family stores. It is stated that the southern and eastern races of Europe, who were, before the quota system was applied, coming over almost in torrential streams, now find themselves checked, but exhaust their quota rapidly and know no slackness.

However, through the present system our country is losing people whose presence has so largely helped to make our country what it is today. The great west and northwest are filled with sturdy and willing workers coming from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Ireland, Great Britain, Germany and a few other countries, and but for these American stock would have been slower in creating the newer states. Long ago Great Britain and France practically populated the eastern belt of states, with more or less of German citizens filling up the central belt of states and constituting a large factor in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan.

As no discriminations are made between countries, to do otherwise would only be to invite trouble, ill will and international complications. Therefore congress judiciously applied the quota system impartially but did select the year, 1890, upon which the system was made to apply. It is now sought to make the quota apply to native origin, but this is brim full of angles, perplexities and difficulties of a baffling character, and if persevered in will be to invite a sea of trouble and endless complications.

Cure present known defects in the present law, install humanity, decency and saneness and let the rest go.

TASK OF IMPORTANCE

In each of many states the criminal is both antiquated and uncertain. It must be borne in mind, too, that the average lawyer-legislator is not over-enthusiastic as regards modernization and simplification of criminal court procedure. Only the other day a distinguished Federal judge censured a body of New York attorneys for their lukewarm attitude toward that urgently needed reform and warned his hearers that further indifference and neglect might cause the public to take the whole matter of reform out of the hands of the legal profession and, of Chicago, long and ardent advocate of revision of criminal codes, urged voters to cease sending lawyers to legislatures, in order that the necessary reform may receive unbiased consideration by lawmakers.

Unquestionably, the most important phase of the great work undertaken by the American Institute of Law is the preparation of a model criminal code. If, in due course, it produces a code that is indeed a model, the task of inducing state legislatures to adopt it will present formidable difficulties.

The other phase of the institute's work is connected with a restatement and clarification of the body of civic laws, or the reduction of judicial precedents and interpretations to definite and certain form.

That does not involve legislation. Nevertheless, the undertaking is colossal. And the value of its accomplishment lies in the fact that it will enable the public, as well as the legal profession, to better grasp the fundamentals of American law which are the embodiment of the evolved national sense of justice and fair dealing.

Respect for law that is intrinsically sound and essential to peace and civil harmony is bred by knowledge of law and a general comprehension of the social and moral principles on which it is founded.

Goat's milk has practically the same nutritive value as cow's milk, but a distinct advantage over cow's milk in that goat's milk may be safely fed to a baby raw without the risk of infection with tuberculosis. Cow's milk may be safely fed if it is certified milk.

High Compression Power from your Old Motor

YOU DON'T have to buy a new car with a high compression motor to enjoy the advantages of fuel economy and extra power. Your old motor will give you both, with Red Crown Ethyl Gasoline in the tank.

Leave the carbon in and let it increase compression. With ordinary gasoline, high compression makes your motor "knock" on starting, climbing hills, whenever you throw a heavy load on the motor.

With Red Crown Ethyl Gasoline you'll lose the "knock" and gain added power. The higher the compression, the more power and mileage you will get.

This new fuel is dependable, quick starting Red Crown Gasoline to which has been added Ethyl Brand of Anti-Knock Compound. It gives every motor in passenger car, truck or tractor more power and a smoother-running engine. It eliminates the strain and wear caused by "knocks". It helps to keep engine condition up and repair bills down.

For these reasons this new, high compression motor fuel is recommended for constant use in every make, age and type of motor by the Standard Oil Company of Nebraska. It can't hurt any motor. It will improve motor performance in winter as in summer.

Prove its superiority in your car. Drive the hardest hills you can make in high gear with the gasoline you are now using and time yourself carefully. When your tank needs refilling supply it with Red Crown Ethyl Gasoline and put your car over the test hills. Note how this better gasoline "knocks out the knock." All you get is power—more power and speed than your motor ever before produced.

Be sure you get the genuine. It is sold only where you see the Red Crown Ethyl Gasoline sign—by reputable dealers and service stations everywhere in Nebraska.

RETURN TO GOLD STANDARD

The vicissitudes of the World War forced almost all the gold standard nations of the world, except the United States, to abandon that standard. Monetary theorists who did not believe in the gold standard anyhow were easily convinced that its general restoration was impossible, and that their theoretical substitutes would now come in for a trial. It has taken less than ten years, however, to prove their hopes illusory. Within the past three years, nearly every nation of importance whose currency has been depreciated has virtually, if not formally and completely, got back to the gold standard.

The larger number of these countries were financially not able to "come clean" in the matter, as Canada and Great Britain have done. As the new York Times puts it: "It has to be recognized that gold payment is in the main being restored after virtually repudiating part of the war currency obligation. The extent to which that expedient was practiced measures the scope of war time economic waste of national resources. Yet from all that confusion and chaos the gold standard itself emerges."

In Great Britain, Joan Maynard Keynes and his school shrieked about the ruin to business which would result from going back to that standard and pleaded for a "managed currency" in its stead; but the hard-headed business men of the realm agreed with the leading bankers in opposing their schemes and returning to the practice under which Great Britain's financial greatness had been built up. A "managed currency," with the chance that theorists of the Keynes type might get into the position of managers, did not present an attractive prospect. Great Britain did not care to be dog for that kind of monetary vicissitude.
