OUR IMAGINATIONS

Is imagination waning?
 The motion picture leaves less to the imagination than did the old-time novel and drama. The talking film leaves still less for us to imagine. Literature in turn has become realistic, vivid. The radio familiarizes us with the voices and interests of the people in all sections of the country. The arts of illustration in magazines and newspapers save us from exercising imagination.
 The elaborate and efficient news-gathering agencies of the newspapers cover a wider and more varied field than formerly and supply more descriptive details. The prolific genius of inventors has given us new and clever devices, appliances and other inventions so rapidly that we accept calmly new things that would have startled the imagination of former generations.
 The automobile and other means of travel and communication have eliminated much of the guess, curiosity and imagination from human experience. We possess more facts as well as more things today.
 However, just to live in this age is a challenge to be alert, mentally resourceful and imaginative. One can not use nor enjoy the many conveniences and inventions of this age without an extremely intelligent use of one's imagination.
 Science has widened our knowledge, deepened our understanding of nature and blazed new trails for the human imagination. Never before did the human race more actively imagine what tomorrow will bring forth in scientific mechanism, in political organization, in art and religion, in industrial methods and output and in social life.
 We live in an age of remarkable transition that arouses the imagination, stimulates thinking and develops the sense of wonder. Instead of losing our power to imagine, we are developing more acute ability to speculate, dream and imagine.

A SKYSCRAPER AGE

Things grow old quickly in this modern world.
 In Chicago, a mater of 35 years ago, was built the world's first skyscraper—the Tacoma Building, 14 stories tall, erected on a new principle which made a steel framework carry all the weight.
 For years it was a marvel. Architects studied it, and the lessons it taught led to the construction of towering buildings that mark every American city.
 But now it is being torn down—after a scant 35 years of life. It is out of date—too small, too cramped. In its place will rise a building three times as high.
 With the return of the brown thrashers mocking birds and cat birds, the three principal singers in the feathered world inhabiting this country, it would appear the birds were doing their bit to celebrate music week.
