THE FINANCIAL OUTLOOK

That 97 per cent of the investment bankers of the United States look forward to improved condition in the bond market during 1930 and that 60 per cent of such institutions have already enjoyed substantial increases in business, is indicated by a summary of replies to a questionnaire sent out to more than 2,000 investment institutions throughout the United States.

Although the majority of security dealers foresee an active and rising bond market in 1930, the replies to the questionnaire indicate a belief in financial circles that the investment market in the future will be better balanced between stocks and bonds than heretofore. The majority believe that widespread public interest in investment stocks has become a permanent feature of the securities markets but that, at the same time, there will be renewed and increasing interest in bonds.

One of the interesting features brought out through this survey is the territorial distribution of the improvement in the bond market which has taken place since the stock market break. The brightest spot in the nation from the standpoint of the bond dealer—according to the replies tabulated—is found in New England, where nearly 33 per cent of those reporting state that their business in bonds has increased 100 per cent. Next to New England in percentage of improvement in bond sales in the South—particularly the Richmond and Atlanta Federal Reserve districts. New York and the Pacific Coast report a fair measure of improvement; while a lesser degree is noted in the Chicago and St. Louis territories. The smallest percentages of improvement are shown in the Cleveland and Minneapolis Federal Reserve districts.

Other highlights of the returns from the questionnaire include the following: The majority of dealers believe that the higher grade domestic and high-yield foreign bonds will be the most active during 1930 and will show the greatest degree of improvement in price and demand. The greatest factor in the present upward tendency of the bond market is a renewed appreciation of safety of principal. Other important reasons stressed are: more attention to income, turn of capital from stocks to bonds, and temporary investment awaiting stock market stabilization.

Seventy-five per cent of those replying believe that the majority of investors are inclined to wait for evidence that we are actually in a strong bond market, rather than to invest now.

Public utility, municipal and railroad issues are favored as the classes which, investment bankers believe, will be most popular during 1930. As to the relative popularity of short-term maturities in the 1930 market, opinion is about equally divided. The majority of investment dealers foresee a stronger demand for bonds of the higher grade, with little attention paid to the medium grade and lower grade issues.

The majority of dealers report that the principal volume of present business is coming from individual investors who purchase in medium-sized amounts rather than from institutions. The next most important class among current buyers is the small individual investor.

Easy money received the largest vote as the factor which would be most effective in giving further impetus to the bond market. Many other dealers believed that a dull stock market would be most helpful to bonds, and there was frequent mention of the desirability of a continued curtailment of the volume of new offerings.

Fifty-two per cent of the security dealers believe that the bond market in 1930 will be good; 34 per cent consider such prospects fair. Eleven per cent report a belief that the bond market will be excellent. Three per cent report a pessimistic attitude and look for a poor bond market.

More than 40 per cent of the replies state the belief that investors in stocks during 1930 will pay primary attention to actual yield, rather than to earnings. This indicates a swing in the direction of conservatism, since during the recent era of stock speculation the factor of income return was almost entirely ignored.

Another interesting opinion expressed by investment bankers in their replies to the questionnaire is that a general rule for measuring the average price of common stocks of strong and well-managed corporations during the coming year will be about 12 1/2 times the earnings per share. This is substantially lower than the average price ratio which prevailed during the recent bull market, but also higher than the old rule of "ten times annual earnings" which was widely applied in former years.

OUR AMAZING WEALTH

Though this post-holiday season is not the most appropriate time for realizing it, our national income has grown into a stupendous total. Figures just made public by the National Bureau of Economic Research show that at the end of the year 1929, the United States showed an income which had reached the astonishing peace of $89,419,000,000. These figures did not take into account many items of income, such as increased value of property, but showed only the actual realized increment of the nation.

To comprehend the import of these statistics, we may consider that the national income for the year 1909 was a fraction over $29,000,000,000. During the war the figures naturally rocketed, and the total stood at $85,949,000,000 at the end of 1919. But since that year a steady and sound growth had brought a future increase of more than $23,000,000. Since 1909 there have been only two years marked by recessions of the national income, once in 1914, when the world was first paralyzed by realization of the magnitude of the rising tumult in Europe, and again in 1921, when the inevitable reaction came following the war's sudden close. The rally was prompt, and 1922 showed an improvement of some $2,000,000,000.

All of those figures are almost beyond average comprehension. They have a vague but very elastic meaning to most of us. And as we have intimated, the week after the holidays is not the most convenient time imaginable for the citizen to focus his mind upon millions and billions. Yet the record is reliable. Whatever the share of each individual, our aggregate income is a staggering sum.

Grandma might send her short skirts to her Fiji sisters.

THE ARMY ON THE JOB

If you don't think that the Salvation Army was kept busy this holiday season, glance at these figures, submitted from the army's central headquarters in Chicago:

Something like 2,000,000 gifts were distributed in 275 cities and towns in eleven middle-western states by the army's workers. Among them the following: 100,000 pounds of toys, 600,000 pounds of potatoes, 300,000 apples, 120,000 dressed chickens, 180,000 oranges, 60,000 pounds of candy, 60,000 fruit cakes, 24,000 cans of milk, coup, and vegetables, 120,000 pounds of sugar, 60,000 loaves of bread, 60,000 pounds of coffee, 60,000 pounds of butter, 60,000 packages of crackers, and some 400,000 pieces of wearing apparel.

All of which would seem to indicate that the old reliable Salvation Army was very much on the job.
