Does outlawry of war by agreement make it less lawless.

Amos 'n' Andy were not the only ones who were "regusted" in 1930.

It is called the week end, but it seems to develop a stupendous amount of energy.

The only obstacle to a United States of Europe is the United part.—Some hitch.

There also is entirely too much unemployment among the brains of motor car drivers.

The Nye campaign questioning committee appears to be far from the end of its labor.

We notice there's still enough money in this country to keep up the morale of bank robbers.

There are more autos than locomotives, but this doesn't imply that the majority is always right.

The preacher who insists that there is a hell can now find many business men who will agree with him.

Its lucky the Declaration of Independence was put over before the present Senate had to ratify it.

When a gang leader has an erratic employe on the payroll it is customary to lay him out rather than off.

It doesn't help the least bit to remember what a sucker you were with your money about this time last year.

Nothing in a name. For instance, a man named Wise down in Kansas has just been arrested for having five wives.

The Hobos are heading for Dixie, very few want jobs, the majority evade work.—Why not put them in the army?

A man touring the world to prove the earth is flat has been sued for back taxes. At least he now knows how it feels to be flat.

What has been generally overlooked in the present generous aid of the destitute is that country people have largely escaped notice.

A writer wants to know what has become of all the dime novels. They're probably running as serial stories in some of the 25-cent monthlies.

Leading authorities on pugilism have pronounced "Young" Stribling of Georgia the first of all the heavyweights now in the fighting game.

A Boston professor says that poetry is a spontaneous achievement. There are many editors who wish it were capable of spontaneous combustion.

American transportation experts are to teach Russians how to operate their railroads. They'll enjoy the distinction of being the first to "train" the Soviet.

Just read an interesting magazine story on "The Psychology of Laughter." Now will somebody please write an article on the asininity of the radio announcer who laughs at his own funnyism.

The feeling of being poor, as distinguished from the grim reality, has become the especial prerogative of those whose securities, and more particularly whose stocks have taken a heading dive.

All who have had to bear the bruising attack of the "go-getter" species of salesmen will sigh in relief at the good information conveyed to us by F. A. Platte of New York City, that it is no longer tolerable in business.

We don't know how it would turn out on the wet and dry question, but if there was a referendum on the question of having an extra session of Congress called, the "NOS" would be so loud they'd be able to hear it on Mars.

The senate's authorization for the expenditure of 30 million dollars on the modernization of three battle-ships is the outgrowth of some maneuvering on the part of American delegation at the London conference last year.

A cynic is a man who thinks everything rotten except his precious self.

Some people find it easier to live without an income than within one.

A Senate confirmation looks like bread cast on the waters with a string on it.

Nor can you judge a man by the brand of cigars he smokes during the holiday season.

America spent four millions last year for firearms, and more for other methods of divorce.

How dear old ladies are shocked to see girls do the things they vainly longed to do at that age!

No human being, to parrot a statement by Theodore Roosevelt, can see farther ahead than fifty years, and foremost concrete social, economic, and political developments.

The business depression has served to reawaken and intensify the more or less disseminated dogma that the people of a state should organize to buy the products of that state.

"The day is coming when people will use airplanes as they now use automobiles," says Col. Lindbergh. Now, Charley, let us hope not. The way we now use automobiles is something fierce.

One of the daredevils of the World War, the Count Felix von Luckner, commander of a German marine raver, is lecturing, as his performance is called, to amused audiences in the United States.

George Bernard Shaw says the Russians make the best movie films. The manner in which they carried out their conspiracy trial would indicate they are at least capable of putting across a good show.

Either by assassination, or intimidation and persecution, or physical corruption, or mental decay, or a long term in the penitentiary, every member of the senate taking part in crime or vice is punished for his misdeeds.

HYSTERIA BY COMMITTEE

If the Fish committee, which has been investigating communism in the United States, had not already convicted itself of hysteria, its recommendations to Congress might be a surprise.

As it is, they are just what was expected. The committee finds there are a half-million communists in the country, and it proposes that we outlaw communism or any other subversive political faith. The United States is in no peril and communism or any other form of radicalism; but the Fish committee would have us do what we have never done: that is, attempt to suppress a political idea. Congress, we are quite sure, will do nothing of the sort. To do so would be to change our form of government to keep the communists from changing it, which would be quite as disastrous to democracy one way as the other.

One member of the committee, Congressman Nelson of Maine, kept his head when his colleagues could not. He said in his minority report: "In proportion as we work out economic justice here in America and so order our social system that labor shall share in the economic life of the nation as fully and fairly as it now shares in its social and political life, in just that proportion will radicalism fall of its own inanition and the threat of communism cease to disturb us." Exactly. To do what the Fish committee proposes would be to make more communists. Moreover, it would create a tyranny of law the consequences of which are too well known for debate. Mr. Nelson has the right idea. It is by making more equitable the great wealth of the nation that we can destroy radicalism. We cannot do it by handing that wealth over to a few people and making laws for the suppression of all those who dissent. The gravest lesson in all history is that it is precisely over the shoulder of such suppression as the Fish committee proposes that the liberties of men have at last been struck down, and so it would be here. How long would it be until the party in power put its own interpretation upon what the committee calls "subversive" proposals?

The way to deal with an idea is to have a better idea. We have a better idea than communism in the United States, and so long as we stick to it we have nothing to fear.

Calvin Coolidge will go down in history as the President who, while he didn't make any breaks, got all of them.

Probably the multiple divorce, too, will admit after a time that it is quality, not quantity, that counts in marriage.

Judging from the hullabaloo still going on among the wets and dries, it looks as if no great question can be settled by a Literary Digest poll after all!

The Federal Prohibition Commissioner has admitted that his agents spent $31,940 for drinks in four months, and perhaps explained in court why current quotations are high.

Both parties already have their minds on the 72nd Congress. Both have issued calls for caucuses in the latter part of February—Republicans the 26th and Democrats the 28th—to lay plans for controlling the House in the next session.

The terms of settlement of the Welsh coal strike have not been made public, but in a country where more than 2 million persons were already out of employment, any arrangement permitting 140,000 miners to return to work must be a matter of national rejoicing.

Two rather strange and contradictory trains of thought—or thoughtlessness—have been noticeable all this year. One is that so many prominent men, officials and publicists have kept on warning the world that Europe is preparing for war. The other is that the general public has continued to pay little attention to such prophecies.

THE RIGHTS OF WOMEN

The proposed Lucretia Mott constitutional amendment, which guarantees that "men and women shall have equal rights throughout the United States and every place subject to its jurisdiction," at a hearing held recently before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, showed women divided as to the desirability of sex equality. The feminists of the National Women's Party were militant and insistent in an advocacy of equal rights for their sex through this amendment which they are sponsoring. Opposed to them were numerous other distinguished women representing national organizations.

Whatever may be the outcome of this agitation, notably accelerated since the adoption of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Amendments, there is a rather general feeling that its ultimate composition is not to be secured—and should not be—through the militancy of such organizations as the National Woman's Party. If sex equality is a good thing—which many are doubtful—it will be a development brought about by educational devices compelled by a new evaluation of women and a recognition of a polity not known to the ages which have preceded us.

Incidentally, and bearing somewhat upon this mooted subject, the emancipation of women in Turkey has given them one right formerly held by men only, a right which they have not hesitated to exercise—that of instituting and obtaining divorce. An average, it is said, of twenty-five divorce suits a day are being brought by women, which, perhaps is natural enough, despite the injunctions and pronouncements of the Koran.

But Turkey is no criterion, as yet, for the Western World, though in France quite recently much emotional excitement has been aroused by the decision of a Bordeaux Judge, which was to the effect that French husbands have the legal right to open wives' letters. Other French legal authorities have confirmed the decision, but all hands balk touching the right of a wife to open a husband's letters.

Of course the American problem goes deeper than this, touching property rights in many states, and other rights not in harmony with the progress and spirit of the age. But the question seems to be one not for constitutional amendment, but one for the consideration of the respective states. In the meantime the country may retain its serenity while the ladies fight it out between themselves, as the meeting before the Senate subcommittee appears to indicate them to be quite willing to do.

SOME TRUTHS

The tendency of modern alleged reform is to more and more empower centralized government. This is wrong and unhealthy. Mr. President Cleveland's reassertion of the principle of American democracy, that it is the business of the people to support the Government, not the Government to support the people, is fundamentally right. It is not to Congress that we should look in time of public distress so much as to the Legislatures of commonwealths, which are close to the people, which understand their needs and wants far more accurately than any Congress can ever understand and know them. And they have, and should have, the power to act. We are supposed to take care of ourselves. In times of public distress such as the present, when the country has ample supplies of money, of food and raw materials and credit, there must be something wrong when public industry can be widely disturbed and general suffering can attain to major proportions. But it is not to a paternal Government that we would look for relief and succor. The people and the states have rights and duties which may not safely be frittered away either in the name of humanity or of economic expediency.

FIRELIGHT DREAMS

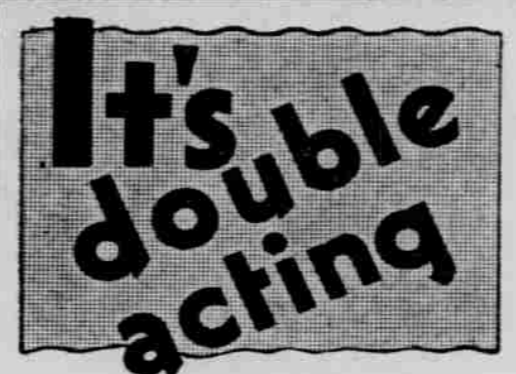

Strange are the dreams
When the firelight gleams
And the winds outside are blowing.
My fancies play
At the end of the day
While the coals are highly glowing.

I'm a jolly soul
And I'll fill my bowl
And I'll drink it down at a sitting
What do I care—
Blue eyes—gold hair—
A woman's smile—'tis fitting.

What a foolish whim
That my eyes grow dim
And a flame that mocks and flashes—
How strange that I
Should sit and sigh
'Til there's naught but cold gray ashes.

ASSASSINATING KING COTTON

The more spectacular operations of the Government in the wheat pit have somewhat obscured the effects of the agricultural marketing on the cotton grower of the South. Faced with inability to protect cotton purchases against future price because of the operations of the Government, a great majority of dealers, merchants and exporters have simply retired from the market, leaving the field to the Farm Board.

The steady system by which cotton was bought, stored, contracted for by spinners and merchants for long terms in advance, and through which each crop was absorbed at competitive prices when it came to market, has entirely broken down. Spinners now buy in a hand-to-mouth manner, obviously since it is ruinous to buy raw material at sixteen cents and then be forced to sell the finished product on a basis of ten-cent cotton.

Meanwhile the American cotton producer is rapidly losing his markets. For the year 1928-29 the world consumption of American cotton was 15,076,000 bales and of foreign cotton 10,806,000 bales. In one year of Government cotton operations the use of American growths declined to 12,023,000 bales and that of foreign growth increased to 12,206,000 bales. There has been no subsequent swing back to American cotton in world competition, and the experiments of the other Governments with price-fixing indicates that there will be no such swing until the Government abandons its untenable position.

MORE OR LESS TRUE

An egotist is a husband who thinks if his wife had it to do over again, knowing him as she does now, she'd still jump at the chance to marry him.

Our idea of a modern sissy is a ribbon-counter Sheik who owns one suit of silk undies that he washes out in the bathroom bowl every night and hangs over the tub to dry.

A man boasts that he never feels away time in a store, but knows what he wants and gets it; but his wife knows that if he wasn't so easy that the dumbest clerk can buy him he'd have more money to give her.

If a man went to a formal evening party with as much of his bare back exposed as a woman does, if he wasn't mortified to death at making such an exhibition of his backbone, he'd freeze to death from the exposure.

A lot of the money the women spend on themselves may look wasted, but it would look more so if it had been spent on their husbands.

Another advantage in having the wife working, too, is that when they get home at night she's as sick of town as he is, and there is no argument about going back after the canned meal to a movie.

So far we haven't heard of a scientist ever trying to explain why an old married man gets such a kick out of being gallant to and liberal with almost any old dame, but the one who keeps him straight, darns his socks and gets his meals.
