HUNTERS RIGHTS LIMITED

Water and islands and the banks of the Platte river for hunting purposes are discussed in an opinion by Attorney General Sorensen given in reply to questions by John Gustafson of Shelton. The attorney general is of the opinion that the bed of streams and the islands belong to the land owners, and they have the right to the reasonable use of the water, but the water of the streams, under the constitution, belongs to the people of Nebraska and not to any individual. The center of a stream is the center of the main channel or thread of the current, regardless of the distance from either bank, and the land owner controls the island to the center of the main current, unless his deed specifies otherwise.

The land owner can, in the attorney general's opinion, remove a shack has had it there ten years or longer. An island built up by accretion belongs to the adjoining land owner and permission to use it ought to come from the owner. Hunting blinds cannot be built without permission of the adjoining land owner and he has the right to destroy them if they are built. The owner of the land can also keep a hunter from such blind. Blinds belong to the land owner and cannot be destroyed by one who built them without permission.

Physicists Scan 'Cause to Effect' with Skepticism

Albert Einstein and Edwin Schroedinger Trace Changed Views of Material Realm

Berlin—Doubt has arisen among leading natural scientists as to whether the law of cause and effect has a place in their theoretical physical universe. This was the tenor of two addresses delivered by Prof. Albert Einstein and Prof. Erwin Schroedinger recently.

Professor Einstein explained that Newton's theory of the attraction of masses has been qualified by two new theories. One describes these phenomena as being field centers. This raises the question of the nature of matter.

The second hypothesis takes a step in another direction. It excludes the law of cause and effect and singular effect from the world of matter, at least whatever its ultimate phenomena are concerned. This theory, advocated among others by Professor Schroedinger, implies that the law of cause and effect cannot be proved by experience or observation as existing in the theoretical physical universe.

The mere act of observation, many leading natural scientists contend, changes the phenomenon observed. Professor Einstein explained this intricate sounding statement by a very simple example. In order to observe a picture it must be illuminated, he said. But as soon as one does that, the colors change and one no longer beholds the painting as it is. One cannot describe the painting as such, but only one's observation of it.

Einstein Disagrees
It is obvious that measuring an electron with the aid of a light ray may seriously affect the action of this electron. But Professor Einstein, who himself appears to disagree with the exclusion of the law of cause and effect from the physicist's universe, assures his audience that in so far as the world observed by their senses is concerned, this law is still valid.

The mere fact that an attack on the law of cause and effect in the physicist's universe has been possible and that this question has not yet been solved, made natural scientists very modest. Professor Schroedinger, himself an eminent physicist, explained. Natural scientists today are altogether more willing to admit their shortcomings, he declared, and he attributed this to the new desire for simplicity and sincerity showing itself in so many fields of thought today. Professor Schroedinger adduced testimony to prove that modes of thought are influencing natural science.

The layman, he said, has always believed natural science was immune to trends of thought manifesting themselves in the world and was convinced that personal views were not allowed to enter it. In the layman's imagination, natural science merely deals with facts. Now, the range of questions to be examined by the physicists in his investigations of the physical world picture is so immense. Professor Schroedinger explained, that it depends upon the free will of the physicist which issues he selects as important for his world picture and which he rejects as inessential.

Influence of Times
The layman now might go to the other extreme and think that every savant works in a different direction. But that is not so. All are in close cooperation with one another. Moreover, all are subject, to a certain extent, to the mode of thinking of the age in which they work. And thus they are all influenced in the same way.

In other words, natural science, in Professor Schroedinger's opinion, is under the influence of the thought or the Weltanschauung of this age. It does not float aloof in an atmosphere of cold facts and impersonal thinking wholly detached from the trend of thought of mankind, which today is toward simplicity.

The fact that the "dogma" of the existence of cause and effect in the material universe of the physicist has been shaken, in fact, in the opinion of some, has been overcome, has rendered physicists exceedingly modest, he continued.

This modesty of thought, Professor Schroedinger said, has also changed the attitude of natural scientists toward other realms of thought. For instance, toward religion. In the years when natural scientists strove to enlighten the world they were made to look down upon religion from their pinnacle of reasoning.

Today, Professor Schroedinger continued, natural scientists show more respect in discussing "things which do not fit into their picture of the universe," he concluded, that "their field of activity is immensely limited, presents only one side and that there exist also other sides which are equally interesting only not so accessible and therefore one must be satisfied with a smaller understanding of them."

FRIEND TO MOURN AT ARTIST'S GRAVE WITHOUT STIPEND

Chicago, Nov. 16.—One friend of the eccentric Louis A. Thiel, who died a year ago Tuesday, needs no reward for mourning at his grave.

William Multhaup said he'd mourn twice a year without pay; for the fund which Thiel, an artist, set aside has been almost exhausted.

In his will he set forth his friends should receive $5 to $20 each 17th of June and November for making pilgrimages to his grave. Eighty-five drew their rewards a year ago, but only five appeared June 17.

PANTAGES LAUNCHES HIS ATTACK DEFENSE

Los Angeles, Nov. 16.—Alexander Pantages, wealthy showman, Monday launched his legal battle to discredit the charge made by Eunice Pringle, 19, dancer, he attacked her when she was 17.

Mrs. Myrta Hawley, first defense witness in Pantages' retrial, identified Miss Pringle as the girl she had seen "many times" in the Hollywood apartment which Mrs. Hawley rented to Nick Dunay, Russian playwright and manager for Miss Pringle.

STANDARD BEARERS MEET

From Monday's Daily
The Standard Bearers held their second meeting yesterday, Nov. 15 at the Methodist Episcopal church.

We began our meeting by singing one of the old hymns, accompanied by Virginia Samek on the piano. After that we each gave sentence prayers.

We then talked of sending a Christmas box to China and Irene Simons, vice-president, read the program for the year.

Harriet Simons then read the Scripture Lesson and Doris Petersen gave the lesson, which was enjoyed by all.

Dainty refreshments were then served by the hostesses, Irene Simons and Helen Schulz. Our next meeting will be December 20.

DOWRY INCREASE DEMANDED WHEN POUND DECLINES

Alexandria, Egypt, Nov. 16.—Britain's suspension of the gold standard has troubled the course of true love in Egypt.

A young Egyptian, engaged, was strolling down the sea front with his fiancee, happy in the thought that her father had promised a dowry of 500 Egyptian pounds.

But his eye found the newspaper headline announcing the action in England and its consequent effect on Egyptian money. He felt a bit ill, he said, and returned home.

Next day his prospective father-in-law was informed that, because of the fall in the pound sterling, the dowry must be raised to 700 pounds.
