Tennis is increasing in popularity. Maybe it's the craze for rackets.

Calvin Coolidge once remarked that Europe "hired" our money. Gave it a permanent job, too.

We keep reading here and there that the horse is coming back. Maybe that will mean more stable employment.

"Fiction could not survive without matrimony." And conversely, it seems that matrimony can't get along without fiction.

"You can not make a village of New York City," says former Mayor Walker. Well, if Jimmy couldn't do it, we'll give up.

The average husband is afraid to enjoy himself at a party unless his wife is along to tell him when to quit acting silly.

This year the voters are going to cast their ballots for the man whom they think can drain the red ink out of their fountain pens.

A health organization speaks of "the germs which cling to money." Wish the germs would tip us off on how they manage to do it.

Judging from The Digest's latest returns, the people who promised a chicken in every pot last year are not willing again to take pot luck.

Any way, whoever is elected he will enter upon his tenure of office with the public having a full knowledge of his faults, past misdeeds and blunders.

You see, our early settlers came from Europe, and none of that kind was left over there.

It seems that what the people got for every pot was not the chicken but just the Herb.

Ours is a government of checks and balances—the balances being achieved by taxing the checks.

Doc Mayo says the time will come when there will be no more unnecessary deaths. And the number of necessary deaths can be reduced to one per capita, we suppose.

The Democratic party, in principle, is the eternal foe of monopolists. The Charleston News and Courier says: "This country seems resolved upon the destruction of Calvin Coolidge's monopoly of the ex-Presidency."

THE LIBERAL INDICTMENT

At this stage in the campaign the average voter grows apathetic to yard any appeal. He is tired of politics. The candidates have said their say and are beginning to repeat themselves. One fingers the radio impatiently, turning desperately from Ogden Mills to Ben Bernie. The voters' minds are made up; and the final, whirlwind drive is often largely anticlimax.

One speech, however, delivered within the past few days, was such a masterly arraignment of President Hoover, from the point of view of the liberal republican, that it deserves more than passing attention. It was the speech Senator Bronson Cutting, republican of New Mexico, gave at Denver. Senator Cutting has refused to support Mr. Hoover, and is actively campaigning for the election of Governor Roosevelt. He summarized the republican indictment of the Hoover administration in these several charges:

1. The Hoover cabinet has been one of the least distinguished in years, containing fewer men of ability than either the Harding or Coolidge cabinets, and including only one man, Secretary of State Stimson, who may be said to have superior ability and broad background. The cabinet has included not a single man who ever affiliated with the progressive thought of America.
2. In his important appointments to the bench, Mr. Hoover has preferred such lame ducks as former Senator Lenroot, or such inferior men as Judge Parker, whom he tried to put on the supreme bench. In naming men for important diplomatic posts, Mr. Hoover again restricted himself to party hacks, lame ducks and prospective lame ducks, or heavy contributors to campaign funds.
3. Although Mr. Hoover had promised to place agriculture on a parity with other interests, congress was in session a whole year without a single word of constructive suggestion from the president, who first blocked one relief program, and then sanctioned the infamous Grundy tariff.
4. Mr. Hoover and his veterans' bureau are directly responsible for the costly and extravagant law granting veterans compensation for injuries not received in service. This has been one of the most burdensome of loads placed upon the taxpayer, but Mr. Hoover has avoided mention of it in his economy talks.
5. Mr. Hoover is wrong on the power issue. He has named the wrong kind of men as members of the power commission. He vetoed the Norris Muscle Shoals act. He has been constantly subservient to agencies of the power combinations.
6. Mr. Hoover has been a machine politician, right or wrong, even to the extent of retaining the services of the discredited Mr. Lucas as executive director of the republican national committee.
7. Although he entered public life so independent in politics that he was not able to decide until recent years his own affiliation, Mr. Hoover now is the most devoted advocate of partisan support, right or wrong, despite the warning of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln that that way lies destruction.

These are the principal points of the indictment of Mr. Hoover by the liberal republicans of the land. They account for the revolt from the president by men who have been loyal republicans in the past and expect to be loyal republicans in the future. They feel that they will do their own party most good by rejecting the leadership of Mr. Hoover. They feel that their only hope of making the republican party responsive to the wishes of the American people, is to secure for it the cleansing effect of a national defeat. To save their party, they must defeat Mr. Hoover now.—World-Herald.

A San Francisco man identified a woman fatally injured in a motor car accident as his wife; rode in the ambulance to the hospital and wept over the body, then sadly went home where he found his wife waiting supper. Waiting supper is bad enough. But being out with another woman is too much.

There's nothing to compare with steak and mushrooms cooked over an open campfire and there's nothing like a pot of picnic coffee, and when a more or less dexterous cook overturns the coffee into the steak and mushrooms, there's nothing to compare with the concoction that makes, either.

A news picture has been rushed back from Paris showing Sam Insull, jr., thumbing his nose jauntily at the whole world. Well, if we may revive a once popular phrase, so's his old man.

WILL IT WORK?

Notwithstanding civilization's dictates against corporal punishment, the somewhat astonishing report comes from the antipodes that an automatic spanking machine has been offered for use in the public schools. It is announced that the implement may be adjusted to deliver as many spansks a minute as the offense may warrant and at whatever "spank power" it may be desired to apply. Whatever the attractions of a mechanized age and its "labor-saving" devices, it is not to be supposed that the device will be taken seriously ni that very advanced quarter of the globe.

Though various societies interested in great events of the past have been prodigal in the marking of "historic spots," they have overlooked the geographical site upon which the first spanking took place. A "Society of the Descendants of Patrons of Corporal Punishment" should be formed for this purpose. History fails to record the name of the first spanker. It is equally silent with regard to the name of the first spankee. Something should be done about this. This first spanking was an event too rich in significance to the human race to be overlooked. Perhaps are archaologists may yet discover some ancient record which will enlighten the world on the subject.

It is commonly known, however, that spanking came into practice quite early in the history of the human race—perhaps as early as the neolithic period. It flourished in the last century and was generally employed in all the citrant children. It originally was applied by hand, but later and more fashionable methods made use of such equipment as old hair-brushes, whips, and other homemade spanking equipment. But the vogue lost its hold upon civilized peoples as the twentieth century came in. A generation that has learned how well childhood can be guided without the use of a slipper will find no more than mild amusement in the advent of the spanking machine.

THE TALKING AGE

A protest has been raised in France against the plethora of ministerial speeches. Every week-end five or six discourses are pronounced by Cabinet members. Naturally they contain very little of genuine interest, and are in no way to be regarded as declarations of the Government.

It is suggested that there should be a rule which would forbid these hebdomadal addresses; and only on exceptional occasions should a minister be allowed to talk.

Alas! It is unlikely that in France or elsewhere such a proposition will be put into practice. For this is a talking age, in which the gold of silence has been withdrawn from circulation. The cinema was invented in order that we might, after a long day of talk in business, escape to the recreative silence of the films. But this refuge was too good to last long; and now the cinema has become the chaotic center of interminable talk.

Nor can we stay at home in the hope of finding a haven of silence. Somebody is sure to turn on the radio, and the house will be flooded with talk. The politicians' audiences are no longer limited to those who choose to listen to them in an enclosed space; they can look up continents and traverse oceans with their words.

But they are not alone; everybody who has written a book, or produced a play, or made a notable flight, or invented a culinary dish, or set up a record of any kind, or has something to sell, or has ideas about art, diplomacy, physics, and finance, or who has done and seen nothing at all, must talk about it; and is encouraged to transmit th sitalk until the atmosphere, is charged and surcharged with talk.

Loquacity has surely never before been let loose as in our time. It is true that Caesar regarded the Gauls as garrulous. But if he had lived today he would probably have found that ancient people, by cotarnst, a model of tacturnity.

We are now told that an instrument is being devised which will read books aloud, so that instead of print appealing to the eye, it will assault the ear. The work of Caxton will be undone. The writer (to stick to the familiar designation) who already probably talks into a dictaphone, will reach the reader (if we may still use the old expression) through a megaphone. In short, since man has been defined as a talking animal, modern ingenuity is directed toward multiplying the mediums, and increasing the occasions, of talk.
