After a debt is contracted it seems to expand.

And say this for Europe: She sticks to her guns.

must have been a lot of fun while it lasted, so many are sighing for another just like it.

Wait till the new members of congress begin to quack and you may think the lame ducks were songbirds.

The Pitt Panthers were known to have one of the best goal line defenses in the country, but it went out of office at the end of the regular season.

A 1 per cent sales tax, provided for in legislation introduced at Washington, will put 2 million men back to work, according to sponsors of the bill. In which case they should make it 6 per cent at once and give work to everybody.

In the interest of beauty, the American Institute of Architects believes the American cemeteries need a "czar." If we may believe what the New York critics say, the architect who looked after things in Radio City is just the man.

It's fun to study geography in school nowadays, with all the modern conveniences of moving pictures, and so forth. Of course, the children probably don't learn any geography, but it is great fun. Nobody knows better than we old-timers that lessons learned without pain are no lessons at all.

Well do we remember the slow and excruciating process by which we learned that Illinois was bounded on the north by Michigan, on the east by Ohio and on the other sides by such and such and this and that, but when we learned it we had it for keeps.

After a girl "comes out," she goes out, and then mother worries because she stays out.

The tailor who cuts out the girls' bathing suits ought to be placed in charge of the government budget.

An Illinois man was placed in prison by mistake, and a lot of others have kept out in a similar manner.

These warm, sunny days it is pleasant to find a comfortable place and just "set and think," and then sometimes it's nice to just set.

A certain peculiar expression appears on the face of the driver who is being towed in. At least the editor believes he can detect it on most men.

A pig with eight legs has been born on a Canadian farm and Methodist ministers throughout the land are hoping for an 8-legged brand of chicken.

Democratic leaders deny that Jimmy Walker will be the new ambassador to France. Still, recalling how much time he spent elsewhere while ambassador to New York, it might be a good way to keep him out of Paris, if that is a desideratum.

A modern jazz artist has modified the old-time play "Ten Nights in a Barroom" to "Ten Nights in a Speakeasy"—a distinction without a difference. It is all right so long as they don't go to making it "Ten Speaks in One Night."

The Roxy person is very interesting. According to O. O. McIntyre he has a private gym, but never exercises in it; and according to L. L. he conducts an orchestra, but can't read a note of music. Further interesting information: He has a new theater, the biggest in the world; but is threatened with not giving any shows in it.

MR. RAINEY IS DEAD RIGHT

"I personally believe we can balance the budget without resorting to taxation," says the democratic floor leader of the house of representatives at Washington. To that end he opposes the demands of 14 governors for another $100,000,000 to help the states build more roads. And he says further: "The people will not stand for more taxes, except as a last resort."

Clarifying the reports as to income tax increases agreed upon at the conference with Mr. Roosevelt, he declares that "all the participants in the conference viewed the income tax proposal only as one to be adopted as a last resort."

The leader thus quoted is Mr. Rainey of Illinois, an old-time progressive democrat who was for many years an ardent supporter and trusted lieutenant of William J. Bryan. And he speaks still as a progressive. The trust progressivism of today is to spare an overburdened people additional taxes. It is to balance budgets, at Washington and everywhere, not by increasing taxes, but by reducing expenditures.

The people are paying now for the support of government far more than they can afford. Their own incomes have been cut by a third, a half, or wiped out altogether. Yet they are compelled to pay for government as much as in the heyday of a fictitious prosperity when money was supposed to grow on trees. Government has not reduced its establishment, its standard of living, as the taxpayers have had to reduce theirs. It should. And failure to do it will be visited with swift and certain condemnation.—World-Herald.

There are 10,000 books on the life of Napoleon that are worthy of inclusion in a fairly complete Napoleonic library. This means that good books about him have been published on an average of one every ninety-eight hours since his death 112 years ago.

It is proposed that penal conditions in Georgia be federally investigated. On condition, of course, that Georgia "welcome investigation." Whoever heard of anything being investigated in this country without an official welcome?

It must be maddening to a wet to start a conversation with a statement about beer and have him glance off into an unimportant discussion about economic troubles.

THE REVIVAL OF RELIGION

One of the most interesting developments of the year just ended is the increase in the attendance on church services, and in church membership. The Federated Council of Churches of Christ in America points to this as evidence of a revival of the spirit of religion. We have been told, that in the Catholic church there has been a great growth in attendance.

This seems to be a very hopeful sign of the times. We went through a period, after the war, when it looked as if religion had lost its hold upon the people of America. From the beginnings of our nation, we have always been a profoundly religious people. Religion was the basis of our earliest colonial settlements. Our greatest leaders in the early days did not hesitate to proclaim publicly and to practice their belief in the guiding power of a Divine Providence. The picture of Washington on his knees at Valley Forge, when the cause of the Revolutionists seemed hopeless, has always been one of the most inspiring incidents in American history.

Tenets of every religion make it a consolation in time of suffering and need. There should be no feeling of shame on the part of the man or woman who, having neglected his religion and its call to duty when material things were going well with him, now feels the urge to come back and join again the ranks of the believers, seeking spiritual consolation for a bruised soul. That is what religion is for. That is where its greatest service to mankind is rendered.

We have heard men say that they were afraid of being sneered at if they turned back to the church now, after staying away from it through the fat years. We do not believe that anyone who has felt the spiritual illumination that comes from mere contact with the inspiring source of faith and hope that is in the Church can ever feel other than kindly toward others who, like himself, have felt the need to refresh their spirits and renew their faith. "Here bring your wounded hearts; here tell your anguish. Earth has no sorrows that Heaven cannot heal."

We believe, as firmly as we believe anything, that the regeneration of our national moral, impaired by the disappointments and disillusion of these late hard years, will come about the more surely and the more swiftly if, as we are told, our people are really turning back to the religion of their fathers for strength and help.

ROOSEVELT, THE LEADER

The governorship behind him, he is again a private citizen de jure. Mr. Roosevelt of Hyde Park, N. Y., but defacto he is distinctly something else, with leaders of congress making a beaten path to his door. A conference called for Thursday with a group of democratic senators and representatives reveals the president-elect exercising party leadership. His method now looks like what President Wilson used to describe as "an accommodation of minds," although there was never much doubt as to who was the more accommodating—Mr. Wilson or the gentleman on the other side of the table.

One fact seems to be emerging with clearness. The "Boy Scout" jibe at the president-elect, implying the lack of seasoned fiber in public life and the softness of political immaturity, has become out of date. In the presidential campaign three was happily no extravagant posturing of Mr. Roosevelt before the public as a great man, or even as a remarkable man, born through a special providence for a grave national crisis. The candidate in this respect was not "oversold." He was elected with few people expecting him to perform miracles. If his real abilities have been, in fact, underestimated, so much the better for him.

That he has been underestimated thus far will probably be proved ere long. Whatever may be thought of Mr. Roosevelt's case in his exchange of views with President Hoover over the war debts situation, it is certain that President Hoover encountered no weak or compliant Boy Scout when he surprised the president-elect by his first public telegram from the train at Yuma, Ariz. Mr. Roosevelt could not be bombed into a sudden decision gravely affecting his administration long before it could be organized. He would "co-operate" but on his own conditions.

This public bombing is technical, an art in which Mr. Roosevelt seems to be able to qualify as an expert himself—at least on the defense. Speaker Garner and his lieutenants in the house last week seem to have tested the president-elect in this way by having the newspapers announce that the sales tax was to be put through, presumably with Mr. Roosevelt's approval. The response from Albany was shattering. But perhaps the most significant aspect of the incident has escaped the attention it deserves.

The aspect is Mr. Roosevelt's flat refusal to follow Mr. Garner. No decision will be reached by the new administration concerning the sales tax without the president-elect. Such is the real meaning, it may well be, of the announcement at Albany last week—which must have pained Mr. Hearst—that Mr. Roosevelt was "horrified" by the report from Washington that he approved of the Garner-Rainey sales tax program. The Roosevelt leadership in the democratic party, in brief, is asserting itself. Incidentally, the recent Garner-Roosevelt episode is having the effect of putting the next vice-president in his proper place. The campaign bugaboo that Garner would dominate Roosevelt the coming four years has already been deflated.

The indications are that there is a Roosevelt program shaping up, which is not to say that the president-elect will take no advice but that the program adopted for the remainder of the "lame duck" session, and later on for the special session in the spring, will have the Roosevelt leadership stamped upon it so that every democratic senator and representative will know what he is bucking against if he opposes it. The logic is good—if a policy must have the power of the president back of it to go through, then it must be the president's policy. No president has ever been a successful leader of congress who did not spread himself all over the program he desired to have enacted.

Whether the Roosevelt program proves adequate or wise in whole or in part, time will reveal. It looks at least as if the president-elect would be a glutton for absorbing official responsibility; witness his reported demand to be granted full power to reorganize the government's departments and cut costs of administration approximately in accord with his platform's extravagant pledges. It would be a herculean job, but he has come to him a job for a Hercules. If there is the strength and sense of direction implicit in great leadership latent in the man, his exceptional opportunity for service, with a new congress elected overwhelmingly democratic, should develop him fast.—Springfield Republican.

BUSINESS OF KNOWING FACTS

The deeper we get into the mire of industrial and business depression the more clear it becomes that one of the principal causes of our present situation was the reckless overconfidence of supposedly "big" men in the unsupported assertions of other "big" men.

Nothing could be more amazing than the facts brought out in the inquiry in New York into the affairs of Samuel Insull and his companies. He walks into a bank and asks for a loan of millions. Nobody takes the trouble to inquire whether the securities he offers are any good or not; they are being sold at a certain price on the Stock Exchange, and that is enough for the bankers. They lend him the money, and now it turns out that the securities represented nothing, or practically that.

Ivar Krueger, the Swedish "Match King," likewise built up public confidence, until the biggest bankers and investment houses lent him hundreds of millions on his word alone. They had no way of knowing, of course, that he had turned crooked, but they could have found out the facts about the worthless "securities" he unloaded on them.

We heard of one European representative of an American bank who nearly lost his job when he advised his boss to lay off loans to Krueger.

The very men who were trapped into parting with money intrusted to them by depositors and investors, by reason of their own misplaced confidence in men like Insull and Krueger, are the ones who were most loudly demanding that the public should have confidence in themselves and their institutions.

We are very much in favor of a complete reform of our banking system, which will make it more difficult for men handling other people's money to keep out of prison after they have parted with the money without knowing the facts. If that is lack of confidence, we confess to it. What this country needs is fewer banks and more real bankers.

Japan, although facing a huge deficit, has adopted the largest budget in the history of the nation. So here's another country that has become thoroughly westernized.
