Suit for Control of Radio Station Filed

Howard A. Shuman and Harry A. Shuman Restrained from Operating the Corabell.

A temporary restraining order was obtained from District Judge Frost at Lincoln Wednesday afternoon by the Corabell Broadcasting corporation in an attempt to oust Howard A. Shuman and Harry A. Shuman from control of the office of the corporation and its broadcasting station at 46th and O sts. The station has the call letters KFOR.

The order restrains the two defendants from in any way interfering with the business of the company at its offices in the Security Mutual Life building or its broadcasting station, or from contracting any business or obligations in the name of the company or from using the mail of the company now in the name of KFOR. Hearing on a temporary injunction is set for April 14. The plaintiff asks for a perpetual injunction on final hearing of the case.

The Corabell corporation claims it is owner and entitled to immediate control of the business and broadcasting equipment by reason of a written assignment by the defendant, Howard A. Shuman, to C. E. Sanden and his associates. It is set out that prior to Jan. 16 Howard Shuman was owner of the property and engaged in the operation of KFOR but in order to meet certain obligations, C. E. Sanden and his associates were induced to make the contract which resulted in the plaintiff organization.

On March 10, the federal radio commission issued orders and consent by which the Corabell corporation became obligated to conduct the station and attempted to do so by making Howard Shuman radio engineer. It is claimed that he refused to deliver possession of the business and maintained control and it is contended was making obligations that were accumulating at the rate of $1,000 a month. The petition recites that he was discharged on April 3 as acting manager but refused to quit and prior to April 3, the defendants had started proceedings before the federal radio commission to secure the broadcasting license for themselves. The suit was filed by Sanden, Anderson & Gradwohl and Behtol & Foe.

LANG ACCUSED OF PERJURY

Chicago.—Sergeant Harry Lang, the man Frank "the enforcer" Nitti, aide of Al Capone, is charged with having shot, was taken into custody on a charge of perjury after he had testified at Nitti's trial he did not know who fired at him. From the witness stand, Sergeant Lang, reported to have been wounded by a shot from the gangster's gun during a police raid on a skyscraper office, had said: "I do not know who shot me. I did not see a gun in Nitti's hand and the only gun I saw was one that I kicked on the floor."

After the testimony, Lang was arrested and ordered held in bond of $2,000. He was stripped of his star and pistol. Nitti is charged with assault with attempt to kill Sergeant Lang, member of the detective squad of the late Mayor Cermak. At the time of the shooting, Dec. 19, police issued a statement saying that Lang had been shot by Nitti in an exchange of bullets. Nitti was critically wounded but the officer received only a flesh wound.

At the capitol an early meeting of the senate rules committee was in prospect to determine whether beer shall be sold in the senate restaurant.

States will Pick Own Forest Workers

Selection Will Be Based on Quotas in Proportion to the Population.

Washington.—Criticism and protests from members of congress and others contributed to a decision to place the task of selecting members of the conservation corps in the hands of state employment officials. Robert Fechner, director of the Roosevelt conservation project, said the labor department will depend on the state agencies to recruit men after selection of the first contingent of 25,200 who will begin entering conditioning army camps Friday. Each state will be asked ultimately to supply a quota in proportion to its population.

"The labor department will consult with the state official having the administration of unemployment relief in the respective states and will arrange for the selection of men from the lists of applicants for work for other assistance which already exist in every state of the union," Fechner said. In selecting the first contingent numerous agencies, including city relief organizations, were authorized to contribute quotas. Many members of congress took exception to this system on grounds that state organizations were best fitted to decide which men should go.

Fechner said a large group of men selected from seventeen cities will begin the trek to conditioning camps Friday. They will report at army recruiting stations and from there will be transferred to army camps for two weeks of conditioning. Then they will be ready for movement to the work camps in forests where President Roosevelt hopes to have 250,000 men at work by July 1.

Akron Tragedy May Mean End of Dirigibles

Hope of Navy and Dream of Transoceanic Transportation in Giant Craft Which Crashed.

Washington.—First flights more than eighteen years ago marked a peak of active interest by the U. S. navy in rigid airships, and the fate of the giant Akron airship now has served to raise a question as to possible revision of American policy in air development.

The mammoth air cruiser, designed to be faster, stronger and larger than any other in the world, embodied dreams spun from German Zeppelin successes in the war.

Hope of New Transportation. It was the first of two dirigibles in whose construction the navy saw not only the development of powerful weapons to augment its fleet, but the building of an industry for commercial interests to take up the airship as a transoceanic vehicle.

There was little to begin with in 1916 when the navy first saw its vision. Naval attaches abroad were able to send only meager information on special airship materials. From Scandinavia, where two Zeppelins were wrecked, came samples of light but sturdy girder metal, duralumin.

The first preliminary design of a rigid air vessel contemplated a craft nearly one-tenth as large as the Akron. It was carried to a point where sample aluminum girders were made up and tested.

Not until 1918 was the navy able to get comprehensive information on airships in the for mof plans and descriptive booklets made by the French from a German airship forced down intact.

Previously the government's airship policy had been defined by a joint army and navy body, called the Zeppelin board, which recommended that the art of rigid construction be established on a sound basis and that the navy department was the logical organization to handle the work.

First steps were taken in 1919 when the ZR-1, later christened the Shenandoah, was planned as a general copy of the German L-49 that had been forced down in France.

This act authorizing the airship also provided funds to purchase one abroad and to build the nucleus for a complete airship construction and experiment station at Lakehurst, N. J.

An Accident in 1921.

Purchase of the English R-38, to become the American ZR-2, was authorized in 1920. In 1921, while undergoing its fourth trial flight, the ship was wrecked.

The Shenandoah, incorporating changes resulting from the latest practices in England and Germany, was completed in 1923, a year after negotiations were completed for delivery to the United States of a German Zeppelin, to become the ZR-3.

The ZR-3 was flown across the Atlantic in 1924 and christened the Los Angeles. A year later it became the navy's sole rigid when the Shenandoah crashed over Ohio.

To keep abreast of developments the navy went ahead to design another ship, though no construction program had been up. The plans became the basic design of the two new craft, the ZRS-4, or the Akron, and its sister ship, the ZRS-5, recently christened the Macon, which may soon make her maiden flight.

The Los Angeles was decommissioned and placed out of service at Lakehurst last June, Secretary Swanson has announced he plans to sell that dirigible.

Before being decommissioned she was operated as a sort of flying laboratory for training of personnel and gaining further knowledge of airships.

State Forest Agent Goes to Washington

Seeks Federal Funds for Nebraska to Be Used in Reforestation Work—Work Already Started

Clayton Watkins of Lincoln, extension forester of the University of Nebraska, entrained Tuesday night for Washington to see what portion this state may receive of federal funds appropriated for President Roosevelt's reforestation projects. With him he carried an outline of two major projects—one in the Pine Ridge country and one along the Platte river—suggested by the game commission, as feasible in this state and passed on by Governor Bryan.

The governor sent Watkins to a conference on the subject called in Washington Thursday by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. The governor has no information as to how the federal money will be divided or on what basis and hopes that Watkins can bring back some definite figures.

The outline of projects prepared by Secretary O'Connell of the game commission said that innumerable pine trees along the upper Niobrara and in the Pine Ridge country could be transplanted with benefit to the country and to the workmen who did the job. The thousands of saplings growing in sandbars along the Platte river, he added, might be set out on farm lands where they are needed.

O'Connell mentioned also the work that might be carried on in federal forest reserves, state parks and in the matter of controlling soil erosion, building storage reservoirs and diking state lakes.

MAY BAN PRESS ALLIANCE

Berlin.—The Foreign Press association, representing about 135 correspondents from more than 20 nations, may be dissolved by the German government because the cabinet considers a book written by its president to be offensive. The conflict centers about "Germany Puts the Clock Back," written by Edgar Mowrer of the Chicago Daily News. It appeared a month before the appointment of the Hitler government.

The cabinet has decided to boycott the association as long as Mowrer retains the presidency. He offered to resign but by an overwhelming vote the association declined to permit him. The Chicago correspondent explained his position thus: "My standpoint is: Responsible foreign newspaper correspondents must by no social or other personal pressure of whatever nature be hindered in the freedom of their criticism in so far as they report to their country on the basis of unchallengeable material." At a general meeting Mowrer asserted that the great majority of his American colleagues agreed the book in nowise transcended the limits a political writer should observe. This position, he said, was shared by Frederic M. Sackett, the retiring American ambassador.
