The governor, however, kept in effect the embargo and asserted that no cattle would be permitted to be shipped into the state except to the South U.S. Paul market or to other markets where federal inspection is maintained for slaughtering purposes. The embargo ordered after drought caused livestock feed shortage was designed to prevent in-shipment of cattle for feeding.

"Due to the generally improved conditions in the state and in the drought areas particularly, as a result of the recent rains, it has been decided to remove the troops, at least for the time being," Governor Olson said in his executive order.

GRADUATES WITH HIGH RANK
Miss Vivian Moore, who has been attending Boyles College at Omaha, for the past two years graduated as an honor student, June 8, 1934. Besides receiving the ordinary certificate given students who complete a course, Miss Moore received The Honor Graduate Degree of Business given by the National Association of Accredited Commercial school to students taking a complete course, whose grades in each subject must be above 90. This speaks well, inasmuch as the highest grade given is 95, and Miss Moore's grades were 94 in practically all of her subjects.

Because of the high standard of requirements for this degree, very few students are eligible for it. Miss Moore being the first one to receive this Honor Graduate Degree in approximately 3 years from this school.

The subjects comprising the course taken by Miss Moore were, Complete Bookkeeping, Banking, Commercial Law, Business Penmanship, Rapid Calculations, Business Spelling, Shorthand, Typing, Filing, Office Training and Dictaphone.

Because of her business ability and capacity, Miss Moore was called on quite frequently to substitute for some of the teachers in the college in addition to being called to some of the business firms to do temporary work, where the best qualified student from the school was sent.

Distant pastures may look enticing to some, but not to those who keep abreast of the values advertised each week in the columns of the Journal.
