Kansas City Company Plans to Work Thru

Kansas City Bridge Co., May Continue Work Near Here During Winter Months.

Unlike most Missouri river contractors who must close up shop when winter freezes the channel over, the Kansas City Bridge company which has a project near this city, probably will work all winter.

With most of the dike and mattress work on bars in the river the Kansas City outfit need not worry about eccentricities of ice-clogged water because they can move land equipment on the bars and drive dikes regardless.

However, final decision as to just how long operations will be continued rests largely with Dame Nature. Should the winter be reasonably mild the company probably will not cease construction. But, should temperatures fall far below zero and the weather get nasty it is too much to expect laborers to work under those conditions, river men declare.

Equipment necessary to carry on full time work is now awaiting unblocking of the channel below Nebraska City. As soon as navigable water is available the fleet will hurry to Plattsmouth to get ready for the winter push.

Orley Clements of Edmound demonstrated and described the value in his miniature postoffice. It was voted to hold the next meeting at Louisville in January.

The principal speaker was Dr. W. H. Morton, chairman of the Department of Secondary Education in the Teachers' college of the University of Nebraska. Dr. Morton spoke on "The American High School." He told the group assembled that high school youth are with us and not taken care of in industry and said that it was needed that they be provided with something to do. They need the high school education. The decision, however, as to whether or not a community will have a high school is left with the community, for there is no law requiring such an institution. Following Dr. Morton, each member of the faculty presented a report of the State Teachers' conventions. Those reporting were: Miss Eileen Green, Miss Bessie Daigh, Miss Thelma Reynolds, Miss Marjorie Arn, Miss Mabel McGinnis, Mr. E. F. Gorr and Supt. L. M. Hauptman.

Yellow Foxglove is Very Easily Grown

A True Perennial That Is Much More Easily Grown Than Ordinary Type.

The very beautiful and easily grown hardy yellow Foxglove is known to surprisingly few gardeners. It rewards attention much more readily and frequently than the ordinary familiar biennial Foxglove (Digitalis purpurea), for the yellow species (D. ambigua, sometimes listed as D. grandiflora) is a true and reliable perennial yielding its beauty year after year with little trouble to the gardener.

Moreover, it sows its seed freely, so that if by any change the original plants die out there are always plenty of healthy youngsters springing up to take their places. These younger plants are never so aggressive as to become a nuisance.

Another advantage of this plant is that it gives two generous crops of bloom. In the neighborhood of New York City it begins to flower the first week in June and continues until the middle of July. Then it takes a rest, but early in September it again starts to send up flower spikes. Often after a hard frost this industrious plant will attempt, and sometimes succeed, in producing a display of flowers.

A Handsome Plant.

Digitalis ambigua is a native of the mountains of Southern Europe and Western Asia. It makes a handsome tuft of long shining pointed leaves, slightly hairy and indented along the edges. From this tuft arise the hairy and leafy flower stalks to a height of some twenty-four inches or more. The flowers are bell-shaped like those of the common Foxglove and are strung closely along the upper portion of the stalk, opening from the bottom upwards. They are a soft cream-yellow in color, lightly flecked on the interior with golden brown.

It is a handsome plant for the foreground of the herbaceous border, where it is particularly effective grown in front of the blue peach-leaved Bellflower, Campanula persicifolia. It also thrives in a wild garden that is not too wild and overgrown, and it is a delight in a rock garden where a little height is desired.

The yellow Foxglove makes a neat plant, and in the poor soil of the rock garden its height is somewhat less than when grown in a richer medium, but in no other way does it suffer from this restricted diet. Its blossoming in Fall makes it especially valuable in the rock garden, where a that season bloom of any sort is at a premium. The yellow Foxglove is not particular as to soil, and it grows equally well in full sun or partial shade. It is easily raised from seed planted now, in a cold frame, or out of doors in the Spring.—From the New York Times.

A BUNNY

A Bunny peeped out from a bunch of grass, And saw Old Shep was coming en-masse, He made his escape from the back door of his den, Making a bee line for the brush heaps near the glen.

Safe under a heap Bunny silently crept, While Old Shep sauntered around, Bunny quietly slept.

For at night he meanders out for his food, And gathers it where it may seem to be rude.

A cabbage patch was found to be very high The brush heap that was chosen, he could not deny, So Bunny became hungry and ventured a space, Determined on some cabbage, if he challenged Old Shep for a race.

The cabbage was growing and tender and good, And soon near the edge of the patch little Bunny stood, He spied Old Shep coming across the glen,

So he rushed to the shelter of the little red hen.

What a noise she made at such a bold intrusion, It seemed for a time all was confusion, But quiet prevailed when Old Shep stole away,

For it was beginning to show faint signs of day.

Bunny concluded to go back to the brush, And there remain quiet through the morning rush,

So he quietly slipped around the quaint old thatch, Resolving to stay away from that cabbage patch.

Wabash News

Louis Reese and Lester Bothwell have been busily engaged in cutting and getting up a supply of wood for the winter and as the weather has been fine for the work they are now enjoying it much better than when the snow and cold weather comes.

Wabash Supplied the Ducks

There was a Fathers and Sons banquet at the Grace Methodist church in Lincoln on Friday of last week and for that banquet Wabash supplied the ducks for the roasts, they being furnished by Miss Myrtle Wood and Parker Obernaulte. Some thirty were needed and nothing but the finest was sent. We are sure they touched the proper spot, as we were fortunate enough to have one for dinner ourselves.

Disposes of Good Team

L. R. Standley, the merchant farmer, delights in good horses and keeps only that kind. Last week he was tempted by a very fine offer for one of his teams by Mr. Golden and the trade was made. Now Mr. Standley is in the market for another good team of horses.

Entertained Ladies Aid

Mrs. Ira Helms, who is one of the active members of the Ladies Aid of the Wabash church, entertained the membership at her home last Wednesday afternoon, all enjoying the afternoon very pleasantly, but were pained when they received the sad news of the passing of the mother of the minister, Rev. C. F. Weber. The mother, who resided at Platte Center, died last week from cancer, her death detaining the pastor from being here to conduct the regular services last Sunday.

Enjoyed 81st Birthday

Mrs. Susan Bothwell, who has been a resident of Cass county for more than sixty years, was passing her 81st birthday on last Tuesday, November 26th. Aunt Susan was born in Missouri and later lived a short time in Iowa, coming to Plattsmouth over sixty years ago and was united in marriage with Ira Bothwell just after the Civil war. Later they made their home in Weeping Water, coming from there to Wabash to reside. They lived in Kansas two years and then returned to Wabash to make their home. Ira Bothwell taught a rural school here even before there was a town of Wabash and boarded around with the parents of the different scholars, as was the practice in those days. All may know that this was a long time ago, for the practice has not been in vogue during the past fifty years or more.

The friends of Mrs. Bothwell knowing of the passing of her natal day, showered this good woman with birthday cards, the number being so large that she was greatly surprised and well pleased. She is very thankful to all for their many kindnesses in thus remembering her birthday.

Death of Joseph Mesina, Long Time Resident of County

Passed Away at Home of Daughter, Mrs. Herman F. Gansemer in Mt. Pleasant Thursday.

The death of Joseph Mesina, 78, occurred Thursday afternoon at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Herman F. Gansemer, west of Murray, where he had made his home for the greater part of the past two years.

The deceased was born in Kokoma, Indiana, October 11, 1856, coming to Nebraska when eleven years of age in 1867. He has largely made his home in Mt. Pleasant and Center precincts, engaging in farming until his advancing years made necessary his retirement from the active duties of life.

Since the death of his wife Mr. Mesina has made his home a part of the time with the daughters and also at his home at Manley, but in the past two years has been with Mrs. Gansemer on the old home place in Mt. Pleasant precinct.

He is survived by the two daughters, Mrs. John Hable of Manley and Mrs. Herman F. Gansemer. There are also three grandchildren to share the sorrow that his passing has occasioned as well as a very large circle of friends.

The funeral services will be held on Sunday at 2 o'clock from the Gansemer home five miles northwest of Murray. The interment will be at the cemetery at Weeping Water where Mrs. Mesina is at rest. The Hobson funeral home of Weeping Water will have charge of the services.
