Laughing Around the World

The Tools Were Lacking

By IRVIN S. COBB

TWO traveling men sat at breakfast in the dining room of a South Carolina town. To them came a polite negro, soliciting their orders. Said the first: "Bring me grapefruit, coffee with hot milk, corn muffins, bacon and eggs."

"Yassuh, I got you," confirmed the waiter. He addressed the second patron: "Whut's yourn goin' be, Cap'n?"

"I'll take the same as my friend here, except that the eggs should be eliminated."

At the sound of that last, mysterious word the darky stiffened. "Yas sub," he said, and departed straightway for the kitchen. Almost immediately there floated in through the swinging doors which separated kitchen from dining room, a medley of sounds betokening a violent debate between two persons of African antecedents. And then on the heels of this the waiter reappeared. With him was a large, plump, coal black person in a greasy apron, and with a look of grave concern upon his face.

"Boss," he said, "Ise de cook yere an' I strives to please. But you'll please, sub, haf' to 'scuse me reguardin' yore desires 'is mawmin' fur 'eliminated aigs—an' that's a fact.'"

"Don't you know how to eliminate an egg?" demanded the joker. The cook favored him with a winning smile. "Who me?—w-y to be suttin'ly I does. Any other time dem 'eliminated aigs'd be settin' right dar in front of you now, smokin' hot. But to tell you de truth, boss, dey wuz a flighty nigger gal come foolin' round de kitchen yistiddy w'ich she rightly didn't have no business to be there neither; an' she drapped the 'liminator and bruk de handle off of it."
