RIDPATH chronicles the events of the ages as the newspaper chronicles the common-place happenings of the day. He takes you back to the beginning of history before the pyramids; describes how the great law-giver, Moses, led his people out of slavery, and from the various tribes founded a nation.

He takes you back to the ancient republic of Greece, and tells the history of that marvelous people, their religion and learning, their arts and sciences, their civilization and patriotism. He pictures the deeds of Marathon and Thermopylae, the career of Alexander the Great, and shows the influence of that little country on all subsequent history and how it helped to mould even the language in which this paragraph is written.

He tells you the history of Rome; the wonderful career of Julius Caesar, in many respects the foremost man of all the world; the growth and development of the Republic, the causes which led to its downfall and to the establishment of the Empire.

He gives you the history of the nations of modern Europe, the stirring story of the Crusades, and sets forth clearly the causes which led to the overthrow of the civilization of Greece and Rome, resulting in the dark ages of the world.

He brings you on down to modern times, showing the birth of the spirit of freedom when men determined no longer to be governed without their consent by other men no wiser, no better than themselves, and how this spirit of freedom finds its fullest fruition here in our own land where Washington led the colonists to freedom.

In reading this History you see the pilgrims leaving their native land to find a place of political and religious freedom. You see the little clearing; the block-house and the fort; the rude and lonely hut; brave men, true women, builders of homes, fellers of forests, founders of States. You read the story of the early struggles, the hardships, the privations and finally the victories of those who have given us as their legacy this country and this nation.

And finally the History is brought down to the close of the Nineteenth and the beginning of the Twentieth Century, showing the wonders of progress and material development in electricity and science and architecture, and all that contributes to make the nations of the world what they are today. This splendid history will increase your knowledge, your intelligence, your patriotism and your love of country. 200,000 Americans already own and love Ridpath. You owe it to yourself and your children to place this work in your home. Send Coupon Today.
