moral influence to protect them, but we are not called upon to turn our army and our navy into a police force to prevent and suppress all acts and practices presented from acts of injustice. If any of our own people act in such a manner, we are as free to resent it and punish it as we would be to resent and punish any similar offense by one of another nationality. We have a right to defend ourselves against all attacks, real or supposed, and to safeguard our lives and our property.

In this article I have briefly treated of four of the public questions under discussion. In closing I venture to call attention to the need of a national convention which many believe we should have if they decide questions quickly and righteously is full information furnished by the government to those who desire it. A national bulletin would not only present the issues, but it should have editorial space in which representatives of the different parties could present arguments brought forward, and so that all the people would have all the information necessary to act in the program was all quiescent, but a paper should also permit space on equal terms for all candidates legitimately before the country. So that public present government officials and our people will not do good to them which you love, nor evil to them which you hate; but love your enemies, and pray for them which despitefully use you.
