The Bible lays down four great rules, involving the four great elements of the successful reigious training of children-prayer, instruction, example, and restraint. And it is doubted if a solitary case car be found where all these have been united, where the child has not followed in the footsteps of the pious parent; while, on the other hand, if but only one of the four has been neglected, i may have been the ruin of the child Remember, Christian parents, it i not enough to pray for, or even with your children, if you do not also instruct them; and it will be in vain to instruct them, if your own example contradicts your teaching; and in vair example, if, like Eli, when your children do wrong, you "restrain them not." But let all be found united, and all be found faithful to your duty, and you may trust in God that he will fulfill his promise, and that your children will grow up to serve him, and to bless you for your fidelity to their highest
