PRESIDENTEJOHNSON .....

By the untimely death of President Lincoln, Andrew Johnson is called to till the highest office in the gift of the Ameircan people. We have full confidence in his ability to administer the affairs of the governmenmet to a sucful uprooting of the rebellion. His views upon the great questions of the day are similar to those entertained by Mr. Lincoln; and we have no fears that he will falter in the discharge of his duty in any respect. He, like his predecessor, is a man of the people; having risen to his present exalted position through his own exertions and a proper use of the talents bestowed upon him by the Creator. Let every loyal man stand by him, and give him that support which is needed by the Chief Magistrate of the land in a time like this, and we have no fears but O. H. Filkias, C. H Bassett, that the great principles of our government will be properly carried out, and the leaders of this rebellion meet with the punishment they so justly deserve.
