(From the Sunday Globe, ! There's Room in the Upper Story. BY MARGIE.

Young man, are you growing weary Of this reaseless crush and strife? There's room in the upper story, In the higher walks of life.

Push on, with a true endeavor, And a heart that's firm in right; There's room in the upper story For those who win the fight. Away to the utmost borders

Of this beautiful floating ball,

Wherever a spark of genius Has answered its master's call. Wherever a soul is longing For a freer, fairer field,

There's room in the upper story For those success has sealed. Then away from the struggling masses Of those of caliber small, Away to the upper story,

To the highest of them all. Whatever your rank or profession, If loztled and crowded aside, There's room in the upper story ; Press on through the surging tide.

'Tis only the bravest and strongest Will reach the temple's dome, And find in the upper story, A laurel crown and home.

TO CLEAN KID GLOVES .- Benzine is ie best substance to take the greasy irt out of leather gloves, as it does ot attack the leather like most of the other substances sometimes used for that purpose. Those who make it a profession to clean gloves, put them all ogether in a large, widemouthed jar with glass stopper, until it is about half full, cover the gloves with benzine, close the stopper, and shake the whole several times, letting it rest alternately. The gloves are then taken out, one by one, and examined. If any deposits have remained, they are rubbed out with benzine; the glove is then wrung out and hung up to dry. If such gloves were, however, to be worn after simply air-drying, the higher temperature of the hand would cause evaporation with an unpleasant odor of the benzine, which, at the lower temperature was left lithind. Hence they are dried at a temperature of some 200 degrees, between plates heated with boiling water, which removes all traces of benzine, and consequent odor. The benzine, remaining in the bottle after having been used a few times becomes dirty; but as benzine is so cheap as to make it not worth while to recover it by redistillation when thus sefled, all glove cleaners throw it away.

Queer Things About Bables. A writer in the Young Folks for May says: A great many curious things happen to babies in this round world of ours. One thing is planting ed women of Guinea, and isn't half so dreadful as it sounds. The mother digs a hold in the ground, stands baby in it, and then packs the warm sand around him to keep him in place, as you would set out a rose-bush. It keeps him out of mischief, and he can play in the sand while his mother works. All day long he stays in his ted through the mails by affixing one- odd crib, and at night, when she is done ry baby about, she ties him into a fittle chair, which she straps to her back, Letters.-Three cents for each half If it is some very grand occasion, he
