ANTI-MONOPOLY

Is the title of a very handsome Grange picture that has just come under our observation, which truthfully represents the present coultion of the farmer and monopoly. There are many figures represented, and amoung the number we notice the farmers who have come to market with their grain, and find that instead of receiving a good price for the same, they are compelled to give speculators four bushels in order to get one to market. The artist has been wonderfully successful in representing this idea. order to get one to market. The artist has been wonderfully successful in representing this idea. We notice the elegant depot and elevators, together with the "royal trains" of the railroad monopolists, and in the distance the magnificent home of the magnate, while on the other side is the farmer's home showing, in its condition, that the monopoly leave him no remunerative return for his labor. There are other wonderful and truthful ideas delineated in this valuable and interesting work of art, and we predict its sale to be immense. We understand that it is to be sold only by subscription, through authorized agents. Messrs, W. W.
