Several cities in the state have a city ordinance prohibiting chickens running at large between April 1st and November 1st. The children of neighbors can sufficiently endanger peaceable relations without the active cooperation of a flock of chickens, and Red Cloud ought to have an ordinance of the same kind, as some people will persist in allowing their chickens to run at large, to the great annoyance of their neighbors who have gardens.

One evidently has to go away from home to hear the news according to the following from the Guide Rock Signal. We had not thought that the news that Red Cloud would be run on the "wide open" plan this next year would bear fruit so soon: "The building near the depot, for the oil tank line has been completed and the tanks placed in position. They are massive iron receptacles, each about ten feet in diameter and fifteen feet deep and we understand will each hold a carload of oil. The wagon which will be used in delivering the oils to the towns that will be served from this point, arrived several weeks ago and is a very handsome and substantial affair. Now if we could just manage to sidetrack that carload of fine old Kentucky whiskey that is said to be enroute for Red Cloud and abstract a tank full of it to operate as a side line. Guide Rock would once more be strictly 'in it.'"
