BINDER TWINE IS SCARCE

Famine So Serious That Much Grain Will Not Be Bound

The Nebraska wheat crop exceeded the expectations of the farmers, implement dealers and implement manufacturers. It was so great that the supply of binder twine has run out and a supply sufficient for the crop cannot be found. The wheat harvest is over, excepting in the northern and western part of the state, but the oats are yet to harvest and the supply of twine to bind the remainder of the harvest is not in sight.

"The wholesale price of binder twine is about 7 1/2 cents," said C. E. Haynie yesterday. "I offered 10 cents for four carloads of twine today and could not get it."

"I have written letters to all our agents asking that they send me all of their left over stock. I hope to get a little in this way; then I have two carloads on the way, and this represents the sum total of the supply with the demand such that I could dispose of 300,000 pounds right away."

"The twine can't be secured and farmers will have to take care of that part of their crops yet to harvest without binding it."

"The reason for the shortage is that manufacturers and dealers underestimated the crop. Twice as much twine was required to handle the crop as had been estimated. The supply has been sufficient for the demand up to the present, because more twine was ordered in the beginning than appeared necessary. The selling price has not been affected by the shortage, and if twine could be secured now it would be handled at a loss than the farmers might be supplied."

Dealers say this is the worst shortage in binder twine experienced in a quarter of a century in this state.

The shortage is felt in Nebraska, Iowa and the Dakotas. The harvest exhausted the supply on hand in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma.—Friday's State Journal.

"The Highest Education" will be the subject at the morning service. As this is the last service before the pastors vacation a large attendance is desired. Sunday school meets at 10. JOHN J. BAYNE, pastor.

The Boy Scout Movement

We have heard some unfavorable criticism of the "Boy Scout" movement to which a word of reply may be appropriate. It is said that the boys would better be at work, earning or helping to earn their living. The movement does not interfere with the work of the boys in the least. Some of them, indeed, are induced to work, who would otherwise be idle. The scouts must incur certain expenses which they are obliged to earn themselves. They must deposit specified sums in the bank whereby they are taught economy and pecuniary management.

But all boys must have some play time. The object of this movement is to take this play time and make it as instructive and educational as may be. There have been three short "hikes" so far under the charge of the scout leader. The Chief undertakes to say that few things can be more educative of the true manliness of a boy, his self reliance, a proper pride, a fine courtesy and decency of conduct, than the companionship, during the period of one of these "hikes" of Mr. Overing.

Nothing would develop his interest in the geological formation of country and encourage his study of its minerals more than a day's outing with Father Fitzgerald. The Rev. Bates, on the other hand, will quicken his observation and stimulate his interest in the birds and plants. Others will spur his efforts in other directions.

Every gentleman in the city should look forward to the time when he will be called upon to accompany the boys, and give to them the best there is in him for their highest culture. If every man in this vicinity cultivated in himself the ambition to be useful to the boys in this direction, it would not be long before the moral and intellectual atmosphere of this city would exhibit a decided change for the better.

The "Boy Scout" movement does not concern itself solely with the boys who are enlisted in the troops, nor the men who have official connection with the organization, but it asks every man in the city to be his best before the boys, and prepare himself to be their interesting and instructive companion for a half day's journey.

Let the critic of this movement ask himself these questions. Is he willing to give up a half day of his time to association with the boys for their good? If so, in what direction is he sufficiently informed, that he can make that half day entertaining and educative to the boys? He will be used, if he can be useful.

Band Concert

The regular weekly concert given by the Red Cloud Band on their stand Tuesday evening was perhaps the best attended and most enjoyable of any previous concerts of the season. Prof. Betz has been doing some telling work among the members and the technique displayed by the instrumentation was gratifying to the admirers of the best band in southwest Nebraska.

The Miserere, from Il Trovatore, was excellent and the work of Mercer and Hohensee, cornet and baritone in the duet, was highly appreciated.

Vision of Silome, Spanish Waltzes celestial choir imitations, popular airs and in fact a variety of up-to-date stuff convinced the many strangers who were interested listeners that the band is all we claim for it.

Remick's No. 3 Medley overture in which baritone Hohensee was featured, proved a pleasing finale and the ever popular Tuesday evening concert by Prof. Betz's Red Cloud Band will always be looked forward to with pleasure.
