Corn Ready for Selection

Corn in most parts of the state is in good condition for seed selection, according to members of the Extension Service of the college of agriculture.

Since corn is about normal this year, there is little cause for worry in the seed situation, the careful selection always pays dividends. The man who selects in the crib often takes the largest ears and usually gets the later corn by doing this. Selection in the field enables him to choose on the basis of early maturity. Also, reliable seed permits him to plant exactly the amount necessary to get a desired stand, and there is no likelihood of getting the corn too thick or too thin by guessing how much seed will germinate.

Probably the most convenient way to gather seed is to do it while husking early feed for the hogs, a common practice on many farms. A box may be put on the side of the wagon, and seed ears placed in this as they are found. Immediate drying is necessary for corn thus selected.

Early selection and proper drying often make the ear test unnecessary. Preliminary tests usually show such corn to be uniformly good.

Every pig has a fine arch back and good coat of hair and looks very promising. Three pigs are bred by our 3 head boars, Jumbo, Jr. by Nebraska Junior, Amazon Ben by Big Ben Amazon and Giant Wonder by Excellent Wonder by A Wonder and have the same blood lines on the dam's side as we have raised for several years past. We also have some new blood for old customers. The gilts are selected from both herds and will do good for the buyer. We extend to each and every one a cordial welcome to the sale whether you wish to buy or not. We will give all a square deal and treat you as good as we know how.
