Talk peace, talk prosperity, talk contentment, talk happiness. As you talk so you think; as you think, so you will be.

The United States must (not can, or should, or might, just simply must) do its share in settling the world's problems. Else all this terrible toll of lives and loves, of food and finance will have been for naught.

The well-fed man is a contented man. To feed the hungry peoples of foreign countries is perhaps the most politic action possible. As an efficient aid to world peace we believe food will outclass fighting.

A man who succeeded is on record as saying, "I believe some of my unhappiest times were when I was given a chance to get ahead." The moral there of being that one does not achieve success without both effort and sacrifice.

Why so much noise about a mere Hundred Million Dollars for the benefit of our destitute brethren across the water? The amount is a mere nothing as against the starvation of women and children, over there. Nebraska's ice cream bill for last year was thirty-five hundred thousand dollars. Cut out the ice cream once and pass the bread to the hungry neighbor.

The Omaha Commercial Club spends from $35,000 to $50,000 a year for advertising purposes besides getting a large amount gratuitously contributed by the country publishers who realize that the upbuilding of a great commercial center makes for the benefit of the state in its entirety. Past this in your hat: The town that is liberal in the matter of advertising is the town that prospers and grows.

Senatorial racket over League of Nations affairs is little more than hot air. The polite term for this agitation of atmosphere is "discussing," but omission of the first syllable thereof would make a more apt appellation. As a matter of fact no one knows just what "League of Nations" means. After that little matter is arranged in tangible form there will be plenty of time for legitimate discussion.

J. Ogden Armour, who is supposed to be a past master in matters pertaining to meats and markets declares that a giant monopoly under government supervision will solve the difficulties existent between producer and consumer. And in the same breath puts a kibosh on the plan by admitting that few men with such enormous power as this combine would offer could be trusted to use it properly.

Our eastern friends write of snow, ice, rain, mud, fog, and sickness. Would that we could supply them with an Aladdin magic carpet whereby they could be instantly transported to our southern Nebraska and breathe the ozone of the plains, revel in the sunshine of clear skies, see the little tots roller-skating to school, the older misses going to and fro bareheaded. We are not in the tropical class, but for pure unadulterated enjoyable winter weather Southern Nebraska's 1919 January will be hard to beat.

The writer remembers when his relatives, then residing in New York state, waited in suspense for news from Southern battlefields which was a week in transit. Today we get full detail of the events which transpired on the other side of the world yesterday. In other words the world is far smaller than it was fifty or sixty years ago. In still other words the far distant nations of those times are our next door neighbors today. Their welfare means our welfare, their progress our progress, their prosperity our prosperity, their happiness our happiness. And yet, some smart men are trying to tell us that we, as a nation, should stand aloof,—should take no part in the maintenance of their law and order, prosperity and happiness. The days of isolation are past history. The League of Nations is a necessity, not an expedient.

When this country went into war there were fears galore that industrial problems could not be handled. But we pulled through without serious disturbance. Now, coming out of war conditions, the country is assailed by the same atmosphere of doubt. In view of the fact that during the brief period of nineteen months there was evolved a huge military organization which reached across the ocean and put an end to one of the hardest-fought wars recorded in history; and in view of the fact that productive industry was continued not merely "as usual," but far ahead of "usual," it would seem that restoring normal conditions should not be looked upon as such a tremendously difficult task.

The Superior Express reports a hurry-up telephone call from that city to Oakland, Calif., reply being obtained in twenty minutes. The answering voice was very clear, and the toll was only about eleven dollars.

The division dam in the North Platte River at Whalen, Wyo., where water is diverted to irrigate nearly 200,000 acres of Nebraska soil, is capable of generating not less than 25,000 horsepower, enough to light and heat every home and business house from the Wyoming line to North Platte in the river's valley, and turn every industrial wheel. Unless the people wake up and take steps to retain this great privilege in their own name, it will be grabbed off by some corporation.
