

Country Clubs of Nebraska Cities Swing into 1922 Season

The North Platte Country club and some of the members. Inset, E. N. Ozier, club president.

The roomy club house and golf course of the Scottsbluff Country club are at the base of the rugged bluff from which the city takes its name.

Mermaids on the spring-board at an old swimming hole, Wayside Country club, Columbus. The fairway of No. 9 on the golf course is seen in the background.

Left to right: Instructor Al Hearn, Hal Y. Mino and President Thomas Frahm of the Hastings Country club. Photo by Williams.

At the first green, O'Neill Country club.

Driving from the first tee at the Beatrice Country club. Left to right: Mrs. Milburn, Mr. Carrithers, Mrs. Koss and Mrs. Wesha. Photo by Clarence W. Gale.

On the green at hole No. 5, Fremont Country club. W. R. Adams, club president, is putting for the hole. His opponent is Fred Richards.

The club house and tennis courts of the York Country club. A fine golf course is also a part of this club's equipment. The gentleman with the cigar and the smile is W. G. Boyer, club president. Photos by That Man Gale, York.

On the firing line at the trapshooting grounds of the Sidney Country club. The club also is proud of its attractive golf course.

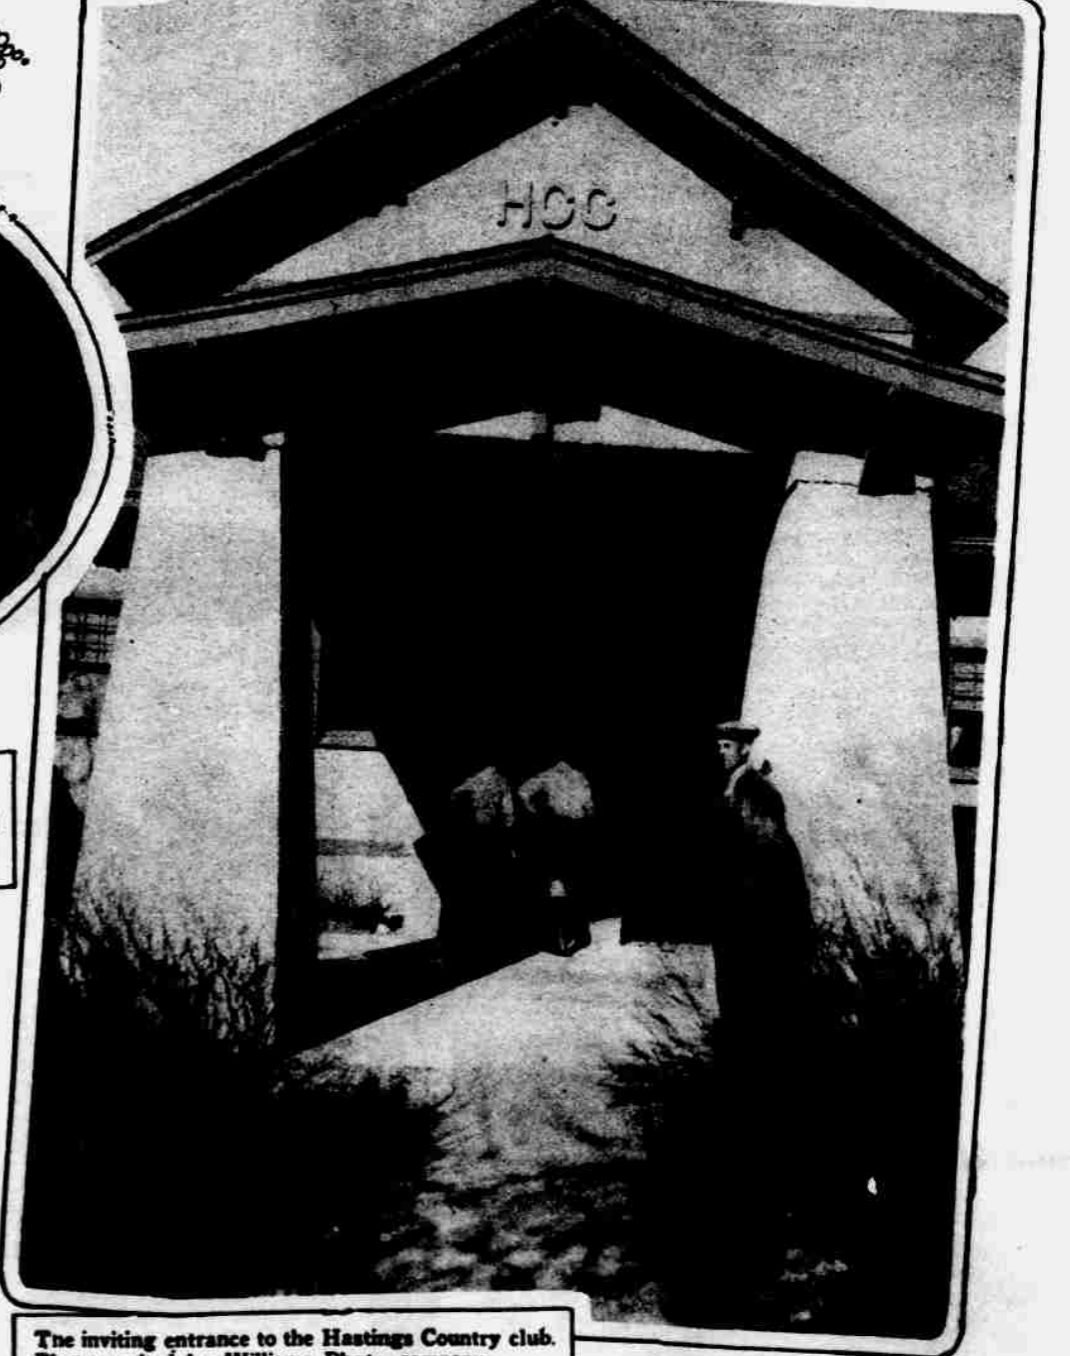

Interior of the Woodland Park club house, Grand Island. President Ray Harrison and Secretary Zieg seated in the foreground. Photo by Keschinsky.

Members of the Woodland Park Golf club, Grand Island, selected an attractive setting for their club house.

The club house and a group of members of the Neligh Country club.

The inviting entrance to the Hastings Country club. Photographed by Williams Photo company.