Delicious Refreshments for the Outdoor Lunch on July Fourth

By JANE EDDINGTON.
Out of Doors Refreshments.
For country small village people, the picnic—everybody comes, has been considered for 50 years or more the best kind of a Fourth of July celebration. I have known of cooks east, west and south, who had treasured recipes used particularly for the Fourth of July basket. The patriotic holiday has been a regular time for showing off culinary skill, both in what the home cook took along to the picnic and what she cooked there.

As in ancient times a whole village often spent itself out into a picnic grove by some lake—such groves antedated our parks as public institutions—and while the men fish and set up tables and benches, the women cook gallons of fish chowder in the church wash boilers, and the most popular spirited fill fireholes with pots of baked beans in the early morning. Breads, pies and cakes are brought from home and a new wash tub of lemonade is compounded on the spot. Everybody works except small fry, and certain young women. Swings are put up and seaweeds hula to the youngsters along to the way out of the water.

City picnic trails have multiplied all over the land with the increase of motor transport. Every little wayside turn, as well as grove and river bank and lake shore, is now taken for the picnic spot. The legitimate forest preserves are the legitimate haunts of the picnickers.

Spare the Flag.
Stuffed eggs or hard boiled eggs—not forgetting a bit of salt for them, but more enjoyable is a bit of mayonnaise—are wrapped in fancy paper. For the Fourth these may be of red, white and blue, but I would always beg that we spare the paper flags for such service. One flag for the occasion, and that one to give delight and dignity, not a lot to muss and destroy, represents my sentiment.

But chief of all picnic supplies is the indispensable sandwich. Unless it can be beautifully packed and kept moist, it is best to take along bread and jars or jelly glasses of filling, and make the sandwiches on the spot. They are fresher. The making of them in the open is pleasurable and may save a hurried getting away.

Several layers of paper may be shaped on which to cut the bread and to spread the fillings. Plain peeled cucumbers and tomatoes will give more satisfaction in the end than potato salad, because they are 95 per cent water, and it is often difficult to carry enough liquids to satisfy the thirst which develops in good picnic weather.

Chicken is not indispensable, but it has been the conventional meat for the picnic basket for several generations.

Picnic Coffee.
Picnic coffee, made on the spot, are almost universally too strong. Pulverized coffee is the most economical thing to use for the picnic as for the home, but in general you will have to grind it yourself as few grocers seem able to grind it to a flour or fine meal consistency. Two level tablespoons of pulverized coffee per cup of boiling water is sufficient to make excellent coffee, or supreme coffee if that amount is added to a half cup of hot cream—making enough for two people. But boiling milk makes good coffee, too, and then perhaps to each cup of it will be added a cup of boiling water dripped over four level teaspoons of pulverized coffee.

Sandwich Fillings.

Setting Colors for Washing

When you take the trouble to make up pretty wash clothes, it is natural not to want the fabrics to fade or shrink. On the other hand there is a certain beauty to the new cloth that makes you dislike to put it in water before making up; but it is far wiser to do it.

When laundering these materials later on you should remember never to hang them in the sun or a strong light, and another thing—always take them down, if hung out of doors, as soon as dry, for the air and wind both work havoc. Some women who are careful, always hang shirts, wash dresses, etc., in the laundry—with windows open—but where the sun will not strike, and in that way the colors last much longer.

Most materials will be thoroughly shrunken if they are well covered with boiling water and allowed to remain until the water is cold; then hung smoothly and without being wrung out where they can drip until just damp enough to iron. A cloth that shrinks badly may have this operation repeated a second time—not the ironing, but putting twice into the boiling water, first allowing it to get perfectly dry from the first wetting, and ironing it after the second. Don't try to press it until just damp—it irons much more easily and isn't stiff.

If it is possible to get oxgall so it is fresh and suitable for use, it is supposed to set any color in silk, cotton, or wool. One tablespoonful of oxgall to one gallon of water, preferably soft water, is the right proportion. If too much oxgall is used it turns white yellow.

One ounce of sugar of lead dissolved thoroughly in 12 quarts of boiling water will set any color except blue, in cambrics, calicoes, or muslins.

Saltwater, one ounce to 12 quarts of boiling water, will set blue.

Alum, one ounce to 12 quarts, is good for blue and green.

Calicoes with blue or pink can be set by putting one tablespoonful of baking soda to 12 quarts of water. Vinegar can be used in the same way for pink or green. But be sure to use pure cider vinegar.

Pearl ash used the same as vinegar will set purple or blue.

(All the above are used in boiling water.)

Three gills of salt dissolved in four quarts of boiling water will set most any color except blue, and that color it sometimes injures.

For buffs, grays, or any delicate color one level tablespoonful of black pepper dissolved in 12 quarts of boiling water will set the color. Allow it to remain until cold.

In setting the color in any material it should be thoroughly rinsed in several waters before being hung up to dry.

A good quality of ribbon can be successfully cleaned by dissolving some good white soap in boiling water so a good suds is made, and when cool enough to bear the hand, pass the ribbon through the water, rubbing it gently. It must be rinsed thoroughly in lukewarm water, and wound around a bottle or pinned to a board to dry. White ribbon should have a little bluing added to the rinsing water. In washing bright yellow, maroon, crimson or scarlet, add a few drops of oil of vitriol to the rinsing water.

Try cleaning delicate lace by spreading it out on a clean white paper, covering it with calcined magnesia; then place another paper over it; place it away between the leaves of a book for a few days. Then shake the powder out carefully.
