

Yankees Warned That Fakers Pose as Titleholders

Many Travelers Are Fleeced by Alleged Noblemen in French Hostelties, Tourists Are Told.

Paris, July 8.—Beware of ducs and vicomtes, not to mention duchesses and marquises. It has been proposed to placard that warning in all hotels which Americans and other travelers frequent, especially hotels near the Opera, following the arrest of Jose Terol, alias Vicomte Romero, whose career in high society cost several guests of leading hotels huge sums of money and no little humiliation.

The "vicomte" always registered at the best hotels. His charming personality and fascinating, although somewhat condescending manner, won him innumerable friends, especially among American society women. Ambitious mothers cultivated him. Ambitious fathers were induced to invite him to dinner. He was understood to be eligible and an excellent match.

But he wore "sneakers." The "vicomte" was shy and went out very little. He preferred to give parties in the large, expensive hotels he chose as his residence. He invited to his parties all the admiring young women, chaperoned by the ambitious mothers and the no less ambitious fathers.

But someone mentioned the "sneakers" to the police. The "vicomte" was considered eccentric, which added to his charms. Every once in a while he would disappear. It was especially commented upon that, during parties, he would excuse himself from the table and remain away, sometimes an hour or so, returning suddenly and silently on his rubber-soled tennis shoes that appeared so interestingly incongruous with evening clothes.

But the police decided to investigate the reason for the "sneakers." The "vicomte" spoke seven languages and was voted tremendously clever and observant. He failed to notice, however, that in the last three hotels in which he had been a "prominent guest" a number of the servants moved from hotel to hotel at the same time he did.

Every time the "vicomte" gave a party thefts were reported in the hotel in which the party was given. Nobody thought it was the "vicomte," who is a Spanish confidence man known to the police, who believe that with his arrest by detectives disguised as servants, work has been begun in the breaking up of a large gang of "mobility" crooks working in first-class hotels in all the tourist centers of Europe. They are eager to warn all travelers against them.

French Ask as to Status of Germany's Government
Paris, July 8.—Is the German empire a republic or is the German republic an empire?

Le Matin wants to know. According to dispatches from Washington, that journal points out, Dr. Otto Wiedfeldt, German ambassador to the United States, in presenting his accrediting letter to President Harding, said: "I have been appointed through the confidence of the president of the German empire and of the German government."

To which Mr. Harding replied: "I am pleased to receive from your hands a copy of the letter of his excellency the president of the republic of Germany."

Ex-Senator Fighting for Fortune in Wilderness

William Lorimer, Representing Rich Syndicate, Tailing in South American Interior to Repay Bank Losses—Gradually Losing Sight.

By ANTHONY CZARNECKI.
(Mr. Czarnicki has just returned to Chicago after a trip through the Caribbean island country and South America.)
(From the Chicago Daily News.)

Deep in the interior of Colombia, one of the few countries of the world that yet hold forth to the adventuresome white man a promise of untold fortune in return for the expenditure of energy, suffering, work, is William Lorimer, whose history in Illinois and national politics and finance alone constitutes a story that is stranger than the strangest fiction could be.

Lorimer, whose heart was broken with the death of his wife nearly three years ago, is alone in this South American primeval country except for a few engineers, a train of Indian guides and packers. He wears as the only connection with his family and past in this country a locket that was dear to his wife.

Determined to Repay.
As the representative of one of the richest syndicates in the world, composed of American capitalists, "Billy" Lorimer is blazing the way to great fortunes for others, to a smaller fortune for himself. Partly to forget, to get away from his great grief here, partly that he might gain that fortune and pay back penny and dollar for dollar, every cent that he owes, Lorimer is undergoing a purgatory of loneliness, privation, danger, back-breaking and soul-searing labor—slowly going blind from cataracts and suffering a torment of pain continually in the failing eyes.

Blazing trails through jungles, climbing mountains, crossing raging streams and rapids generally conducting extensive explorations and investigations of the natural resources of the former senator, although past 61, is working hard under greater difficulties and handicaps than he ever did. When not invading virgin forests, canoeing on streams which abound in man-eating alligators and over which hover malaria-breeding mosquitoes, or searching for mine locations and often scaling perpetually snow-capped mountains, Lorimer devotes his time to carrying out other phases of his mission. He is arranging, in accordance with legal requirements of the country, the various transfers and options of property, contracts, proposals and concessions with government officials, property owners and claimants.

Much Changed in Appearance.
It was in the interior of the republic of Colombia that I met William Lorimer. The work he is doing, the hardships he is undergoing in his efforts to succeed, in accomplishing what the syndicate sent him to South America to do, not only have left their imprints upon him, but have changed his appearance to such an extent that it required a careful second appraisal of the man to recognize him.

His girth is reduced by half. He would be lost in his old trousers. His face has become thinner, but harder. All its firmness is gone. There is a determined compression of the lips which formerly did not appear on Lorimer's countenance and his face shows in its color the result of the vigorous outdoor life.

Many miles from any outpost of civilization while making explorations, surveys and maps in regions heretofore visited by very few, if any, white men, Lorimer has raised a grizzly beard. This makes him appear like one of the old frontiersmen or western settlers in our own country in days gone by.

He wears heavy spectacles to protect his eyes. Occasionally he winces from pain in his eyes. This, he explained, was due to cataracts which he hopes to have removed when he can find time to hurry for a brief visit to physicians in the United States. He had been suffering from a case of malaria considerably weakened but with no otherwise noticeable results. Physicians in Bogota and other cities which he visited in connection with his work say he is completely rid of malaria. But according to the engineers working under Lorimer, the doctors have plainly told him that unless his eyes are attended to in time and the operation for the cataracts is performed he is in peril of losing his sight completely.

In Strange Company.
Mule riding is one of the principal means of travel in the interior of this country, and Lorimer, with his party of Indians, native whites and engineers, has a goodly share of that mode of travel, which requires many years of continuous practice before it becomes bearable and ceases to be a hardship. Seated on a mule, Lorimer presented a picturesque figure when coming out of the jungles. He was dressed in khaki breeches, a khaki blouse, wore no necktie. On his head was a large straw sombrero, his feet were in old fashioned leggings and special boots, around his middle hung a belt from which in holsters dangled a large automatic revolver and a native machete.

Indians and native white peons acting as his guides and helpers, who carry the canoes, tents, food supplies and the necessary prospectors' and explorers' supplies and apparatus, are Lorimer's companions as he invades the densely forested and intensely hot region of the Choco, the rugged mountains of the central and western Cordillera and the valleys of the rivers, some of which are navigable, while others are practically impassable.

Eugene Underwood, an American mining and construction expert, a brother of United States Senator Oscar Underwood, with three experienced engineers familiar with these parts of the world and a couple of interpreters picked up in the cities, compose his entire exploration and investigation party.

which delved into the regions of the departments of Caldas, Boyaca, Cundinamarca and Tolima.

Hails News Correspondent.
It was after one of the most arduous trips in the territory that I met Lorimer. It was along the Miel, the Samana and the Estrella rivers. His party had chopped its way with machetes through dense forests back to the running streams and waterfalls which were of interest to Lorimer in connection with his surveys for water power, proposed railroad route and other developments.

"Hello, Czarnicki; how is the Daily News," he said. I tried to determine who the man addressing me really was. I had heard from a number of sources while going up the Magdalena river into the interior of Colombia that Lorimer was then somewhere in that country, but at first glance I did not recognize him, even when he greeted me. He continued: "I know that I have changed, but I did not know it was so bad that even a Chicago newspaperman would have difficulty to recognize me."

Then, as he continued to speak, I recognized him.

Members of Syndicate.
With the tenacity of purpose and spirit which made him a power in politics, Lorimer has taken up the work of the syndicate as the crowning and most important undertaking of his life. Then men in the syndicate he represents include William H. Finley, president of the Chicago & Northwestern railway; Samuel Insull, Boetius H. Sullivan, George J. Sayer, Andrew McAnsh, Walter J. Rayner, William H. Schmidt, John T. Connerly of Chicago; Charles M. Lewis of Louisville, P. F. Cusick of Scranton, Pa.; William Connors of Buffalo; Daniel I. Haley of Duluth; Charles H. F. Smith of St. Paul, Minn. In addition to these there are scores of others.

The syndicate's survey and investigations disclosed that Colombia's greatest need is railroad transportation and Lorimer, with the engineering experts, has made a survey of the possibilities in that direction with a concrete plan and proposition submitted to the proper authorities and officials of the readiness of the syndicate to furnish the necessary money, trained engineers and construction men as well as all material to build the railroad. They also are preparing to harness the great water power in that country.

Hungers for Home News.
Lorimer was hungry for news about everything and everybody in Chicago. When asked if going back into politics was in any of his future plans, he pointed out that the work which was holding his entire attention would require many years before completed and that it would be very many years before he could even pause in his work to give any such question a thought.

work is here now and will be for some years," he said. "If it were not for the talk of the doctors about my eyes and the pain in them, which bothers me more and more, I would stay on the job in these parts until all our plans and projects would be finished. As it is, I may be compelled to hurry to the states and undergo an operation, after which I will hurry back here again."

"This country and people and all of South America should be better known by our people than they are. This country needs American capital to build railroads and other improvements necessary to give it its full chance in the world. Development of the vast natural resources and riches are needed to make this country among the wealthiest, most progressive and happiest in the world. Those Americans who lead a hand in this great work of development will not only be benefactors of this grateful and fine people, but will also find financial returns of which they have no idea at this time. I am here to carry on until the task is finished."

And as I left him standing saying good-bye he had held tight a small locket. I had seen it upon his watch chain before—a locket containing a photograph of his wife. Her death was the greatest blow to the former political boss and I understood as I went on what he meant when he said to me that the forests, the mountains, the jungles and the very atmosphere of this tropical region were a solace to him and that his thoughts were with his loved ones.

This is a place where one can think, reflect and even have solace for his sorrows and memories," he said, causing me to wonder at the effect the new surroundings were having upon him and his hope for the future.

The United States Railroad Labor Board, under authority of Federal Law, after full hearing to all parties at interest, has fixed present wages for mechanical crafts. Certain employes having declined to accept their decision, the board has directed the railroad to reorganize its forces and has ordered that men who enter our service—

"Are within their rights in accepting such employment, that they are not strikebreakers seeking to impose the arbitrary will of an employer on employes; that they have the moral as well as the legal right to engage in such service of the American public to avoid interruption of indispensable railway transportation, and that they are entitled to the protection of every department and branch of the Government, State and National."

Standard wages and overtime conditions will be paid. Hours to be those necessary for maintenance of the service. Board and lodging, under ample protection, will be furnished.

Young, active men desiring to go into railroad service will be given an opportunity for training in steady, desirable employment.

FOR GOVERNOR

The Man of The Hour

"Representing the republican party of Gage county, we the members of the Gage county republican central committee, commend to the favorable consideration of all Nebraska republicans the candidacy of our neighbor and friend, Hon. Adam McMullen, for governor."
"Mr. McMullen has lived among us from boyhood and we know him as a man of sterling character, high ability and unwavering purpose. As representative of this county in the state legislature for three terms he not only served his constituency well, but learned thoroughly the needs of good government. We are confident in the belief that if elected governor, Mr. McMullen will carry into that office those policies of efficiency, economy and simplicity which the people demand. He will see to it that every tax dollar expended for public service or utility must purchase 100 cents of value."

"Mr. McMullen represents the highest type of public-spirited citizenship. His extensive farming connections give him an exceptional grasp of, and a sympathetic attitude toward, the agricultural problem, while at the same time he may be depended upon to exercise absolute fairness toward all other interests."

"We bespeak for Mr. McMullen the support of all republicans in the approaching primaries, serenely confident that in him they will find a candidate who will not only lead the ticket to triumphant victory in the November election but will reflect credit upon his party by giving the state a high-class business administration."
