Questions of Etiquette. answer the following question in The Omaha Bee (in the morning Sunday, A girl of 17 ought to be caper)? Is it proper for a boy to pay a girl's train fare when they have only been friends for a short time? And when several girls are taking a trip with an automobile and have to stay at a hotel, should the girls pay their own hotel bill or allow the boys to pay for it? Is it proper for a girl who keeps steady company with a boy to take a long trip on a train to visit relatives with. out a chaperon, providing the trip take a day and one night? And years of age. My parents forbid me when a girl has friends staying with her, or meets them, and asks them to go riding with her, and they finally decide on going to a picture show, should the first girl offer to pay, or should they get their own tickets.

The girls should pay the train fare and hotel bills. It is perlaps a folish convention, but you would avoid criticism by taking different trains or going on different days. The girls could at least offer to buy their own tickets. If they are house guests of the first girl it would be better for her to insist on taking them to the movie.
