

Roads Would Save Public Money by Boosting Rates

Officials at Hearing in Lincoln Suggest 40 Per Cent Increase in Tariffs on Nebraska Freight.

Lincoln, Oct. 24.—(Special)—Nebraska railroads, at the livestock rate hearing before the state railway commission, have submitted two resolutions of the Nebraska situation. They suggest that the commission eliminate the 20 per cent reduction fixed by the Aldrich law of 1917, thus permitting them to increase rates a maximum of 25 per cent, which, they say, would enable them to remove all discrimination. The other alternative is to let them charge the Central Freight association rate, plus 20 per cent, which would increase rates 40 per cent.

Neither suggestion pleased the commission, and members of it put the railroad witnesses through a severe grilling. A. F. Cleveland, general freight agent of the Northwest, said that the roads must have more money if they are to provide sufficient power, equipment and facilities, and that the American public is losing more money by denying rates than they would by paying higher rates. Commissioner Taylor could not see where this would help Nebraska particularly, as the greater portion of the money would be spent elsewhere. Mr. Cleveland said that density of traffic should be the basis for rate levels, and argued that as Nebraska was at a disadvantage in this respect it might not be expected to carry goods and stock in this territory at the same rate as in other states, where the traffic conditions were much better from the railroad standpoint.

Rate expert Little, for the commis-son, testified that cattle loadings in Nebraska are from two to seven times as much as in other western states where cattle-raising is followed, and Commissioners Brown and Taylor put this forward as showing that density of traffic would entitle Nebraska to lower rates. Mr. Cleveland retorted that he meant density of all traffic and not of one commodity. Mr. Little said that in most instances Nebraska pays higher rates than other states for cattle carrying.

Democrats Laud Randall as True Son of Nebraska

"I'm for you," said Charles Davidson, a druggist. At Grant's applause greeted Mr. Randall's analysis of Charles Bryan's own figures regarding taxes on his Lancaster county farm. Mr. Randall showed that in 1913 Bryan's state taxes were 27 per cent of his total taxes, while in 1921 his state taxes amounted to only 18 per cent of his total.

At Paxton a moment's stop was made to meet O. M. Grunell, an influential republican. Although the first notice of the Randall meeting in North Platte appeared in the local paper this afternoon, several hundred were in the courthouse this evening to hear him. These being points in Senator Randall's address drew hearty applause. "The law must be enforced. The only way to check crime is to make it certain that if a man is sentenced he will have to serve the time and not get out in a few months as he now usually does under the indeterminate sentence law. We pay for everything as we go. Your 15,000 miles of improved highways are paid for. Your new capital will be paid for when it is completed. We are buying $2,000,000 bonds, the income to be for ex-soldiers' relief. State taxes, as fast as these things are completed, will drop and drop rapidly, starting with this year. "I would rather not be governor of Nebraska than to be bound by pre-election promises which might hamper me in serving the people honestly. I have made no such promises and never will make any."

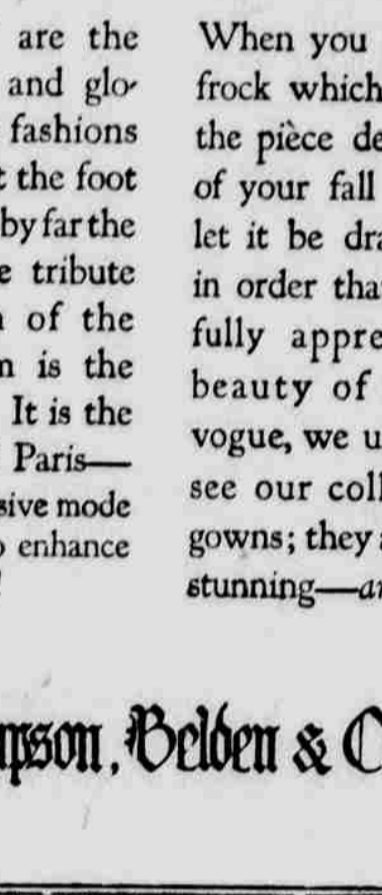

Neither suggestion pleased the commission, and members of it put the railroad witnesses through a severe grilling. A. F. Cleveland, general freight agent of the Northwest, said that the roads must have more money if they are to provide sufficient power, equipment and facilities, and that the American public is losing more money by denying rates than they would by paying higher rates. Commissioner Taylor could not see where this would help Nebraska particularly, as the greater portion of the money would be spent elsewhere. Mr. Cleveland said that density of traffic should be the basis for rate levels, and argued that as Nebraska was at a disadvantage in this respect it might not be expected to carry goods and stock in this territory at the same rate as in other states, where the traffic conditions were much better from the railroad standpoint.
