My Marriage Problems

Adele Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife."

The Way Madge Stopped Dr. Pettit's Accusations. I started with incredulous amazement at Dr. Pettit, as Claire Foster's name came from his thin lips. There was a curious slowness of intonation in his voice, betraying the bitterness which was his toward the beautiful, breezy, young western girl, to whom he had been so devoted the summer before.

"You must be mad," I said firmly, although his accusation against Dicky, absurd as it seemed, had set tiny hammer of memory beating upon my brain, and I recalled incidents of the summer before, trifling enough in themselves, but which in the light of the physician's startling assertion, I pulled myself up short at this point, finished my answer inflexibly. "If you are not, then your statement is an insult both to Miss Foster and my husband."

A slow tide of dark red rose in his shallow cheeks, and his teeth closed on his lower lip so strongly that I saw a fleck of crimson upon it. That he was making a mighty effort to control his temper was patent, and despite the disquiet which his query had brought, I felt an unobtrusive curiosity to see whether he would succeed or fail in his struggle to master his emotions.

"You Presume Too Greatly." "I am not mad," he said slowly at last. "But you are—"

He stopped abruptly and went on after an instant more rapidly. "You always have believed that dastardly husband of yours, no matter what evidence was brought to you, he said 'I'll be damned' and asserted yourself years ago he might not now be exercising his damnable fascinations upon a foolish young girl, who—"

I sprang to my feet again, my patience at an end, and rushed past the excited physician before he could stop me, muttering only with my hand upon the doorknob. "I will listen to this nonsense no longer," I said, remorselessly smothering a longing within me to hear him to the end. "You presume too greatly, Dr. Pettit, even upon your long friendship and association with us. There are things which I permit no one to say, and what you have just intimated is one of them."

"And let me add something else!" I exclaimed. "Miss Foster is a thoroughly good and charming girl, and I like her, but she is no shy, shrinking, timid violet. She is in no danger from the fascinations of any man, unless she chooses to be fascinated."

I fairly slammed the door behind me as Dr. Pettit, with frowning and distorted face, started toward me. Then, utterly regardless of my rudeness, I ran upstairs to my own room, and locked the door, leaving him to find his own way out, or wait for Lilian to usher him out, as he pleased. I heard her quick footsteps outside my door, and counted their progress down the stairs. Then for several minutes, while I lay prone upon my bed, trying to shut from my mind the things Dr. Pettit had said, there was silence.

What Memory Brought. The violent closing of the front door brought me to a sitting posture, and I listened breathlessly to Lilian's returning footsteps. She halted for an instant outside my room, and I knew that I had but to whisper her name to bring her ready sympathy and resourcefulness to me. But I had no doubt that Dr. Pettit had told her what he had just endeavored to relate to me, and I felt that I could not bear to face her possible knowledge of Dicky's delinquencies until I should have scourged my soul to sanity and self-control. So I lay motionless until I heard the closing of her door and then I let my tortured nerves have the relief of tears. I sobbed until I was too exhausted to do anything but sleep.

I awakened the next morning to find the sun streaming in my windows. For a long minute I lay vaguely wondering what it was that was so oppressing my spirit. Then the remembrance of Dr. Pettit's accusation, coupled with the humiliating realization of Dicky's long epistolary silence swept over me, and my spiritual battle of the night before was on again. Claire Foster! I mentally visioned

Black Diamond Information No. 5. Why Do Clothes Wear Out? Hard wear and improper laundering are the two chief reasons for the deterioration of clothing and linens. We cannot give you any help in the matter of stopping the effect of wear, but we hereby offer some worthwhile suggestions as to laundering: Strong soap, and other stringent dirt removers, incomplete washing and rinsing and careless handling are some of the reasons improper laundering is hard on clothing. When you leave your laundry here, it is washed separately—not with other bundles—through eleven different waters. Only the purest soft water is used. Fine mild soap is the only agent used to remove dirt. Is it any wonder that clothes washed by the Sanitary Wet Wash Laundry last longer and look better? SLEEPY-TIME TALES FATTY COON MORE OF HIS ADVENTURES BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY.

CHAPTER 19. Uncle Sammy Coon's Bedtime Snack. One night when Fatty Coon was prowling through the woods in search of his supper a great storm swept down off the mountain. Although Fatty hadn't found half what he wanted for his evening meal, he soon decided to look for shelter. As he crossed a stretch of swampy ground, whose house should he see right in front of him but Uncle Sammy Coon!

"I'll stay here until the storm is over," Fatty thought. So he went to Uncle Sammy's door and knocked. Uncle Sammy yawned. He stuck his head out of a hole high up in the old hollow spruce tree where he lived and asked, "Who's there?" "I am and I want to come in out of the storm," Fatty cried. "Oh! Very well come in and we'll make arrangements in here, where it's nice and dry," Uncle Sammy told him.

So Fatty climbed the old spruce, wondering meanwhile what arrangements Uncle Sammy could mean, unless he meant making an extra bed. Fatty found Uncle Sammy's home slightly crowded. It was a small chamber, and in it were Uncle Sammy, his wife, Aunt Amanda, and five children. He couldn't help wondering where they would make a bed for him for the night. But he soon found that that wasn't what Uncle Sammy had meant. No! It wasn't.

"Now for the arrangements!" said Uncle Sammy eagerly, rubbing his eyes together thoughtfully. And seeing a puzzled look upon the face of his guest, he added, "There'll be something to say, of course, for spending the night here."

How much? Fatty asked the old fellow, who was known as the stingiest of all the forest-folk about Blue Mountain.

"Come on, Alice, you know better said we are going to have Kellogg's Corn Flakes for lunch. And that's the kind I like to eat about a whole box of because they ain't hurry to eat! Come on an' hurry up!"

Kellogg's Corn Flakes are a taste thrill at meals or any time. That's because Kellogg's Corn Flakes are so deliciously flavored—the Kellogg flavor that is known all over the civilized world! You, as well as the little folks, can eat great bowls of Kellogg's Corn Flakes day after day—and each sunny-brown, crispy, crunchily spoonful thrills the taste as though it was the first! Put Kellogg's in comparison with imitation corn flakes! Kellogg's Corn Flakes are never tough or leathery or hard to eat! They are all-the-time crisp, all-the-time good! Don't miss such enjoyment! Insist upon Kellogg's in the RED and GREEN package that bears the signature of W. K. Kellogg, originator of Corn Flakes! NONE ARE GENUINE WITHOUT IT!

"What is it?" Uncle Sammy asked him quickly. "What's happened?" "I have six kernels of corn that I had forgotten," Fatty explained. "Hand them right over!" Uncle Sammy lede him. "My price for a night's lodging has gone up. It is exactly six kernels of corn more than it was when you knocked at my door. Thomas Lunde, C. Corlie, A. H. Burr and E. Connonen."

"What for?" Fatty wanted to know. "For one night's lodging!" "But I haven't had a night's lodging," Fatty Coon objected. "It's your own fault," Uncle Sammy retorted. Just then Aunt Amanda came to the doorway and called: "Samuel! The children have waked up. If you want to get your snack you'd better hurry, for the whole five of 'em are eating as fast as they can eat."

With a muffled howl, Uncle Sammy Coon scrambled up the trunk of the old spruce and whisked through his doorway. So Fatty Coon waddled alone homeward, munching corn as he went, and smiling all to himself. (Copyright, 1922.) To insert your Want Ad, "Tell the Telephone" Atlantic 1600.

Problems That Perplex By Beatrice Falraz.

A Jealous Admirer. Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been going about with a man for one year and a half. We always thought our happiness was supreme. He is very suspicious and without cause accuses me of the most ridiculous things. However, after he thinks clearly, he regrets his actions and asks my forgiveness, and my big love for him prompts me to give him another chance. But I am weary of his constant jealousy. What would you do? DOUBTFUL.

If you are convinced that you are in no way to blame and that you are losing respect for the man because of an ungovernable and uncontrollable temper—stop to think what life with him will be. Real life is founded on trust and understanding. Without faith, love has no real stability or fairness. If your love is lessening now, how can you feel that it will last through the stern realities of life with a man who is not reasonable and who is not master of himself? Such a man is bound to make his wife and children suffer in various ways—not the least of which would be their humiliation at his brutality and their resentment of his unfairness.

The Indifferent Man. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 19 and have been going for a year with a young man three months my junior. Now I love this young man dearly, and I thought he loved me. But to my great disappointment this week he told me not to get serious with him, as we were to be only friends. It would break my heart to have to part with this young man. I have quite a few new friends who ask to take me out, but I always refuse, because I love this friend too much to go out with others. ANXIOUS.

You are making a mistake, my dear, in devoting all your thoughts to this one young man, especially since he has made it plain to you that he is not seriously inclined in his attitude toward you. I admire him for his frankness in warning you not to consider your friendship as anything more than friendship. Keep him as a friend, but do not give up your others.

Dreams Versus Realities. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 29. About a year ago I met a young man six years my senior. I learned to love him. He in turn said he loved me. We quarreled, but I, being at fault and loving him, did more than my share to make up. He seemed indifferent. Now, after six months, he writes, asking if he may see me. I would love to see him again because I know that he could give me an explanation, but my parents object. I have other friends, but he is uppeering in my thoughts. Shall I let it drop and just go on dreaming of him? FLORENCE.

It would be well for you to see this man. You're idealizing him in your dreams. But the reality may cure you.
