Now cometh that annual period in life when all good men dip a pen tero the tok of baseball depeden and elect a lot of baseballers as members of the mythical All-Star team.

In years gone by the chore was fraught with more or less difficulty. But it's different this season. In fact it's simple to an extreme. For at least three of the infield positions, two of the outfield jobs, the backstops and most of the pitchers sort of pick themselves.

And the outfit which the records choose establishes itself as mightiest collection of sluggers that any single year of baseball ever has known. Three men are in the 400 class and the average of the team -exclusive of the pitchers-is .325.

Knew No Superiors.

Cobb and Speaker knew no super iors in the outfield. Williams of the Browns, Ruth of the Yankees and Hellman of the Tigers were candidates for the third job in the garden Williams got it.

Heilman hit somewhat harder than Williams-and Ruth had a higher home run per game average than the Brownie slugger. But whatever Wil-Hams had to yield to Heilman in the matter of percentage he more than offset in four-base work. For Williams banged out 39 four-basers, while Heliman was accomplishing only 21. And, beyond all that, Williams stole 25 sacks, while Heilman could pilfer

Ruth made 35 homers in 110 games while Williams made his 39 in 153 combats. That gives Ruth a better slugging average than Williams.
