There are all sorts and degrees of virtue, and sometimes we are told that virtue is its own reward. Mr. A. F. Evans of Burr's Ferry, La., says, in writing about Brown's Iron Bitters: "I have been the recipient of its virtue in my family to a considerable extent." This great iron tonic has superior advantages as a reliable family medicine. Its power has been thoroughly tried, and its virtues abundantly proved. Nearly a million bottles a year are sold by the druggists of this country.

The Story of the Kind Person.

From the San Francisco Alta.

Some months ago the employe of a certain firm in Costa Rica embezzled a large sum of money, and skipped. The description was forwarded to the firm's resident agent in this city, who instructed the detectives to watch each incoming steamer from South America for the fugitive. When the Grenada steamed past the city front there was a detective on board, and this detective had his eye on a young and fashionably dressed man with fiery red hair and whiskers. He answered the description of the embezzler to a dot. The detective smiled and felt happy. After months of waiting here was his man at last, delivered into his hands, safe and snug, without the possibility of resistance or escape. His mouth watered as he gazed on the red-haired man. He could no longer resist his prey. He tapped him on the shoulder and said with a genial smile, "How are you, Mr. Blank ?"

"I'm pretty well, I thank you," replied the stranger, "but that is not my name." "Of course not, of course not," said the detective, knowingly: "we'll see about it, however my friend. Just come along with me, and everything will be explained," and the officer smiled all over and patted the red-haired man affectionately on the shoulder.

The stranger followed his captor in a lazed sort of way into a coupe, and they drove to the agent's house. "You have been at large a long time, my friend," said the detective; "you've had lots of fun. How much of that money have you spent, now?"

"What money? You must be crazy," said the prisoner. "Of course, of course," said the officer; "jump out here with me. There is a gentleman here who is most anxious to see you." The agent met them at the door, and to the astonishment and dismay of the detective, shook the red-haired man warmy by the hand, and appeared delighted to see him.

"I was just about to start for the steamer to meet you," he said. "How did you find the house?"

"This kind person directed me," said the red-haired man with a grin. "He would have it that I was-who got away with us some months ago." The officer was paralyzed. The gentleman whom he had escorted to the agent's was a member of the plundered firm, quite as anxious for the capture of the embezzler as the detective, but he bore a remarkable personal resemblance to the thief.

The question of whether, under the circumstances, the detective should be reimbursed for the hack outlay is still in abeyance.

An Unknown Woman.

The marriage of the Dauphin of France, subsequently Louis XVI., with Maria Antoinette was associated with ominous incidents. The ceremony was scarcely ended in the chapel of Versailles, when the sky was darkened, and torrents of rain drove the spectators home, and spoiled the fireworks and illuminations.

ended amid the groans of the dying, and the shrieks of frenzied people trampling down weak men and women. The crowd got jammed in a public square; while there was a conflict between those who wished to come in and those who struggled to get out, a scaffolding, hung with ornamental lamps caught The crowd became insane with fear. Strong men thrust down feeble women, and ran over their prostrate bodies. The firemen called to the spot by the alarm-bells rushed their engines over every obstacle. The square was heaped with the dead and dying; one hundred and thirty-two dead bodies were collected from the place. One death touched the Dauphiness, and startled even Paris. It was that of a young woman who was to have been married the next day. Conscious of her failing strength, she said to her lov-

"Leave me to my fate—save yourself!" "Never!" he exclaimed. "I will die with you. But there is hope yet; get upon my shoulders, and I will carry

He stooped turning his back towards her. He felt a light form mount to his shoulders, and a woman's arm around his neck. Tall, strong, and with a will energized by love, he forced his way through the press. When he reached an open space, he stopped, and the fair burden glided to the ground. He turned to embrace his betrothed, and saw an unknown woman.

She had overheard the lover's suggestion, pushed the betrothed aside, and taken her place.

Female Clerks at Washington.

A Washington correspondent writes: women in the department amounts to the giving of a pension direct. The majority of the women, however, do their work well. But they cannot be subjected to as close business discipline as the men. Some of the ladies employed in the Treasury are very nervous. If they were men they would be discharged on account of the bother they give. There is in the Treasury at present a lady who was the daughter of a very prominent former public official.

She was educated and brought up with the most luxurious surroundings. Her father failed a few years before he died and she was left penniless. Her friends secured her a place in the Treasury. She is so nervous and delicate, however, that she cannot be relied upon for any regular work. The other day she nearly went into a fit of hysterics because she was obliged to sit in a room next to a clerk who was in his shirt sleeves. She went to one of the assistant secretaries and made such a wild complaint upon the subject that it was with the greatest difficulty that he could calm her down. At one time it looked as if she was going to faint away in the midst of her excited protest."

"Crossest Man in Alabama."

"De crossest man in Alabama lives dar," said the driver, as we approached a way-side home, near Selma, Ala., to ask accommodations for the night. At supper, and after it, "mine host" scowled at every one, found fault with everything earthly, and I was wondering if he would not growl if the heavenly halo didn't fit him, when incidental mention being made of the comet of 1882, he said: "I didn't like its form; ts tail should have been fan-shaped!" But, next morning, he appeared half-offended at our offering pay for his hospitality! My companion, however, made him accept as a present a sample from his case of goods. Six weeks later, I drew up at the same house. The planter stepped lithely from the porch, and greeted me cordially. I could scarcely believe that this clear complexioned, brighteyed, animated fellow, and the morose being ot a few weeks back, were the same. He inquired of my companion of the former visit and regretted he was not with me. "Yes," said his wife, "we are both much indebted to him."

"How?" I asked, in surprise. "For this wonderful change in my husband. Your friend when leaving, handed him a bottle of Warner's safe cure. He took it, and two other bot-tles, and now—" "And now," he broke in, "from an ill-feeling, growling old bear, I am healthy and so cheerful my wife declares she has fallen in love with me again!"

It has made over again a thousand love matches, and keeps sweet the tempers of the family circle everywhere .-Copyrighted. Used by permission of American Rural Home.

Sheridan and Gen. Emory.

Telling these things of Grant reminds me of a story of the battle of Cedar Creek I got from an old soldier who was there. It will be remembered that when the battle began Sheridan was at Winchester, "twenty miles away," and his army was under the command of Gen. Wright. When Sheridan reached the field the army was defeated, and all but the nineteenth corps demoralized. The corps was under command of Gen. Emory, who had been a professor at West Point when Sheridan was a cadet. Sheridan was quick to seize upon the situation, and he directed Emory to take a certain position and hold it against all odds until he should hear Sheridan's guns at a certain point. Emory promptly obeyed, and soon the battle raged again with the utmost fury. The rebels made assault after assault, but Emory held his place.

Time and again he sent, urgently asking for reinforcements, but Sheridan sent word back to hold on a little longer. He did hold on until Sheridan collected the shattered forces and charged like a thunderbolt, and Early and his army were routed. That evening, as Emory was sitting upon the ground, blackened by powder and exhausted by the toils of the day, for he had been fighting for seven hours, one of Sheridan's staff officers rode up, and, saluting him, said: "Gen. Emory, I am instructed by Gen. Sheridan to present to you his compliments; and to say that he regards you as a regular d-d old stuck buzzard; that you are a glorious old fighter." This unique statement of the staff officer was received with shouts At Paris the fetes were brought to a by those who surrounded Emory. It still more inauspicious close. They appeared afterward that the officer had given literally to Emory the words of his chief .- Indianapolis Times.

A Hotel Man's Discovery.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.-Mr. George H. Arnold, proprietor of the Occidental hotel, says that as the air is purer as we ascend, a man should not object to being assigned a room on the uppermost floor; that he shouldn't mind taking a room-attic, as it were, in view of the fact that St. Jacobs Oil so promptly cures the rheumatic. He states that throughout California it is regarded as the great pain-cure of the age.

Too Close for Comfort. "I had a close call last night," said a seedy looking Brooklyn man with an
